This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world’s books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that’s often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book’s long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

+ Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.

+ Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google’s system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.

+ Maintain attribution The Google “watermark” you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.

+ Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can’t offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book’s appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google’s mission is to organize the world’s information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world’s books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at http://books.google.com/
THE

LAY

or

THE LAST MINSTREL,

A POEM

BY WALTER SCOTT, ESQ.

Dum relege, scripsi sse pudet, quia plurinaerno.
Me quoque, qui feci, judice, digna fini.

NEW-YORK:
PUBLISHED BY J. EASTBURN AND CO.
LITERARY ROOMS, BROADWAY.

1818.
THE Poem, now offered to the Public, is intended to illustrate the customs and manners, which anciently prevailed on the Borders of England and Scotland. The inhabitants, living in a state partly pastoral and partly warlike, and combining habits of constant depredation with the influence of a rude spirit of chivalry, were often engaged in scenes, highly susceptible of poetical ornament. As the description of scenery and manners was more the object of the author, than a combined and regular narrative, the plan of the ancient Metrical Romance was adopted, which allows greater latitude in this respect, than would be consistent with the dignity of a regular Poem. The same model offered other facilities, as it permits an occasional alteration of measure, which, in some degree, authorizes the change of rhythm in the text. The machinery also, adopted from popular belief, would have seemed puerile in a poem, which did not partake of the rudeness of the old Ballad, or Metrical Romance.

For these reasons, the Poem was put into the mouth of an ancient Minstrel, the last of the race, who, as he is supposed to have survived the Revolution, might have caught somewhat of the refinement of modern poetry, without losing the simplicity of his original model. The date of the Tale itself is about the middle of the sixteenth century, when most of the personages actually flourished. The time occupied by the action is three Nights and three Days.
INTRODUCTION.

The way was long, the wind was cold,
The minstrel was infirm and old;
His withered cheek, and tresses gray,
Seemed to have known a better day;
The harp, his sole remaining joy,
Was carried by an orphan boy.
The last of all the bards was he,
Who sung of Border chivalry.
For, well-a-day! their date was fled,
His tuneful brethren all were dead;
And he, neglected and oppressed,
Wished to be with them and at rest.
No more, on prancing palfry borne,
He carolled, light as lark at morn;
No longer courted and caressed,
High placed in hall, a welcome guest,
He poured, to lord and lady gay,
The unpremeditated lay:
Old times were changed, old manners gone;
A stranger filled the Stuart's throne;
The bigots of the iron time
Had called his harmless art a crime.
A wandering Harper, scorned and poor,
He begged his bread from door to door;
INTRODUCTION.

And tuned, to please a peasant’s ear,
The harp, a king had loved to hear.

He passed where Newark’s stately tower
Looks out from Yarrow’s birchen bower:
The minstrel gazed with wishful eye—
No humbler resting-place was nigh.
With hesitating step, at last,
The embattled portal-arch he passed,
Whose ponderous grate and massy bar
Had oft rolled back the tide of war,
But never closed the iron door
Against the desolate and poor.
The Duchess* marked his weary pace,
His timid mien, and reverend face,
And bade her page the menials tell,
That they should tend the old man well:
For she had known adversity,
Though born in such a high degree;
In pride of power, in beauty’s bloom,
Had wept o’er Monmouth’s bloody tomb!

When kindness had his wants supplied,
And the old man was gratified,
Began to rise his minstrel pride:
And he began to talk anon,
Of good Earl Francis,† dead and gone,

* Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch and Monmouth, tative of the ancient lords of Buccleuch, and wid unfortunate James, Duke of Monmouth, who was be 1685.
† Francis Scott, Earl of Buccleuch, father of the INTRODUCTION.

And of Earl Walter,* rest him God!
A braver ne'er to battle rode;
And how full many tale he knew,
Of the old warriors of Buccleuch;
And, would the noble Dutchess deign
To listen to an old man's strain,
Though stiff his hand, his voice though weak,
He thought, even yet, the sooth to speak,
That, if she loved the harp to hear,
He could make music to her ear.

The humble boon was soon obtained;
The Aged Minstrel audience gained.
But, when he reached the room of state,
Where she, with all her ladies, sate,
Perchance he wished his boon denied:
For, when to tune his harp he tried,
His trembling hand had lost the ease,
Which marks security to please;
And scenes, long past, of joy and pain,
Came wildering o'er his aged brain—
He tried to tune his harp in vain.
The pitying Dutchess praised its chime,
And gave him heart, and gave him time,
Till every string's according glee
Was blended into harmony.

* Walter, Earl of Buccleuch, grandfather of the Dutchess,
   a celebrated warrior.
INTRODUCTION.

And then, he said, he would full fain
He could recall an ancient strain,
He never thought to sing again.
It was not framed for village churches,
But for high dames and mighty ears;
He had played it to king Charles the Good,
When he kept court in Holyrood;
And much he wished, yet feared, to try
The long-forgotten melody.

Amid the strings his fingers strayed,
And an uncertain warbling made,
And oft he shook his hoary head.
But when he caught the measure wild,
The old man raised his face and smiled;
And lightened up his faded eye,
With all a poet's ecstasy!
In varying cadence, soft or strong,
He swept the sounding chords along:
The present scene, the future lot,
His toils, his wants, were all forgot:
Cold diffidence, and age's frost,
In the full tide of song were lost;
Each blank, in faithless memory void,
The poet's glowing thought supplied;
And, while his harp responsive rung,
'Twas thus the Latest Minstrel sung.
THE LAY

OF

THE LAST MINSTREL.

CANTO FIRST.

I.

The feast was over in Branksome tower,
And the Lady had gone to her secret bower;
Her bower that was guarded by word and by spell,
Deadly to hear and deadly to tell—
Jesu Maria, shield us well!
No living wight, save the Ladye alone,
Had dared to cross the threshold stone.

II.

The tables were drawn, it was idlesse all;
Knight, and page, and household squire,
Loitered through the lofty hall,
Or crowded round the ample fire:
The stag hounds, weary with the chase,
Lay stretched upon the rushy floor,
And urged, in dreams, the forest race,
    From Teviotstone to Eskdale-moor.

III.
Nine-and-twenty knights of fame
    Hung their shields in Branksome hall;
Nine-and-twenty squires of name
    Brought them their steeds from bower to stall;
    Nine-and-twenty yeomen tall
    Waited, duteous, on them all:
They were all nights of metal true,
    Kinsmen to the bold Buccleuch.

IV.
Ten of them were sheathed in steel,
    With belted sword, and spur on heel:
They quitted not their harness bright,
Neither by day nor yet by night:
    They lay down to rest,
    With corselet laced,
Pillowed on buckler cold and hard;
    They carved at the meal
    With gloves of steel,
And they drank the red wine through the helmet barred.

V.
Ten squires, ten yeomen, mailclad men,
    Waited the beck of the warders ten;
Thirty steeds, both fleet and wight,
Stood saddled in stable day and night,
Barbed with frontlet of steel, I trow,
And with Jedwood axe at saddle bow;
A hundred more fed free in stall:
Such was the custom of Branksome hall.

VI.
Why do these steeds stand ready dight?
Why watch these warriors, armed, by night?
They watch, to hear the bloodhound baying;
They watch, to hear the warhorn braying;
To see Saint George's red cross streaming,
To see the midnight beacon gleaming;
They watch, against Southern force and guile,
Lest Scrope, or Howard, or Percy's powers,
Threaten Branksome's lordly towers,
From Warkworth, or Naworth, or merry Carlisle.

VII.
Such is the custom of Branksome hall.—
Many a valiant knight is here;
But he, the chieftain of them all,
His sword hangs rusting on the wall
Beside his broken spear.
Starks long shall tell,
Low lord Walter fell!
When startled burghers fled, afar,
The furies of the border war;
THE LAY OF

Canto I.

The streets of high Dunedin
Gleam, and falchions redden,
Rd the slogan's deadly yell—
A chief of Branksome fell.

VIII.

Why the discord heal,
Nch the death-feud's enmity?
Christian law, can patriot zeal,
Love of blessed charity?
Inly to each holy shrine,
Mutual pilgrimage they drew;
D, in vain, the grace divine
Hiefs, their own red falchions slew:
Dessford owns the rule of Car,
Ettrick boasts the line of Scott,
Lighted chiefs, the mortal jar,
Of the feudal war,
Never, never be forgot!

IX.

W o'er lord Walter's bier,
Varlike forestiers had bent;
By a flower, and many a tear,
Evio's maids and matrons lent:
Her warrior's bloody bier
Lye dropped nor flower nor tear!

War cry, or gathering word, of a Border clan.
Canto I. THE LAST MINSTREL.

Vengeance deep brooding o'er the slain,
    Had locked the source of softer wo;
And burning pride, and high disdain,
    Forbade the rising tear to flow;
Until, amid his sorrowing clan,
    Her son lisped from the nurse's knee—
"And, if I live to be a man,
    "My father's death revenged shall be!"

Then fast the mother's tears did seek
To dew the infant's kindling cheek.

X.
All loose her negligent attire,
    All loose her golden hair,
Hung Margaret o'er her slaughtered sire,
    And wept in wild despair.
But not alone the bitter tear
    Had filial grief supplied;
For hopeless love, and anxious fear,
    Had lent their mingled tide:
Nor in her mother's altered eye
Dared she to look for sympathy.
    Her lover, 'gainst her father's clan,
With Car in arms had stood,
    When Mathouse burn to Melrose ran
    All purple with their blood;
And well she knew, her mother dread,
Before lord Cranstoun she should wed,
Would see her on her dying bed.
16 THE LAY OF

XI.
Of noble race the Ladye came;
Her father was a clerk of fame,
   Of Bethune's line of Picardie:
He learned the art, that none may name,
   In Padua, far beyond the sea.
Men said he changed his mortal frame
   By feat of magic mystery;
For when, in studious mood, he paced
   Saint Andrew's cloistered hall,
His form no darkening shadow traced
   Upon the sunny wall!

XII.
And of his skill, as bards avow,
   He taught that Ladye fair,
Till to her bidding she could bow
   The viewless forms of air.
And now she sits in secret bower,
   In old lord David's western tower,
And listens to a heavy sound,
   That moans the mossy turrets round.
Is it the roar of Teviot's tide,
   That chafes against the scaur's* red side?
Is it the wind that swings the oaks?
Is it the echo from the rocks?
What may it be, the heavy sound,
   That moans old Branksome's turrets round?

* Scaur, a precipitous bank of earth.
to I. THE LAST MINSTREL.

XIII.
the sullen, moaning sound,
the bandogs bay and howl;
I, from the turrets round,
sound whoops the startled owl.

the hall, both squire and knight wore that a storm was near,
I looked forth to view the night;
but the night was still and clear!

XIV.
on the sound of Teviot's tide,
ting with the mountain's side,
on the groan of the windswung oak,
on the sullen echo of the rock,
on the voice of the coming storm,
The Ladye knew it well!
was the Spirit of the Flood that spoke,
and he called on the Spirit of the Fell.

XV.
RIVER SPIRIT.
leepest thou, brother!"

MOUNTAIN SPIRIT.

"Brother, nay--
My hills the moon beams play,
on Craik-cross to Skehillpen,
" every rill, in every glen,
THE LAY OF

18

Merry elves their morrice pacing,
To aerial minstrelsy,
Emerald rings on brown heath tracing,
Trip it deft and merrily.
Up, and mark their nimble feet!
Up, and list their music sweet!"

Canto L

XVI.

RIVER SPIRIT.

"Tears of an imprisoned maiden
Mix with my polluted stream;
Margaret of Branksome, sorrow laden,
Mourns beneath the moon's pale beam.
Tell me, thou, who viewest the stars,
When shall cease these feudal jars?
What shall be the maiden's fate?
Who shall be the maiden's mate?"

XVII.

MOUNTAIN SPIRIT.

"Arthur's slow wain his course doth roll,
In utter darkness round the pole;
The Northern Bear lowers black and grim;
Orion's studded belt is dim;
Twinkling faint, and distant far,
Shimmers through mist each planet star;
Ill may I read their high decree!
But no kind influence deign they shower
On Teviot's tide, and Branksome's tower,
Till pride be quelled, and love be free."
Canto I.  THE LAST MINSTREL.

XVIII.
The unearthly voices ceased,
    And the heavy sound was still;
It died on the river's breast,
    It died on the side of the hill.
But round lord David's tower
    The sound still floated near;
For it rung in the Ladye's bower,
    And it rung in the Ladye's ear.
She raised her stately head,
    And her heart throbbed high with pride:—
"Your mountains shall bend,
    And your streams ascend,
    Ere Margaret be our foeman's bride!"

XIX.
The Ladye sought the lofty hall,
    Where many a bold retainer lay,
And, with jocund din, among them all,
    Her son pursued his infant play.
A fancied mosstrooper, the boy
    The truncheon of a spear bestrode,
And round the hall, right merrily,
    In mimic foray* rode.
Even bearded knights, in arms grown old,
    Share in his frolic gambols bore,
Albeit their hearts, of rugged mould,
    Were stubborn as the steel they wore.

* Foray, a predatory inroad.
THE LAY OF

For the gray warriors prophesied,
   How the brave boy, in future war,
Should tame the unicorn's pride,
   Exalt the crescents, and the star.*

XX.
The Ladye forgot her purpose high,
   One moment, and no more;
One moment gazed with a mother's eye;
   As she paused at the arched door;
Then, from amid the armed train,
She called to her William of Deloraine.

XXI.
A stark mosstrooping Scott was he,
As e'er couched Border lance by knee:
Through Solway sands, through Tarros moss;
Blindfold, he knew the paths to cross;
By wily turns, by desperate bounds,
Had baffled Percy's best bloodhounds;
In Eske, or Liddel, fords were none,
But he would ride them, one by one;
Alike to him was time, or tide,
December's snow, or July's pride;
Alike to him was tide, or time,
Moonless midnight, or matin prime:
Steady of heart, and stout of hand,
As ever drove prey from Cumberland;

*Alluding to the armorial bearings of the Scotts and Cums.
es outlawed had he been,
and's king, and Scotland's queen.

XXII.
illiam of Deloraine, good at need,
see on the wightest steed;
't to spur, nor stint to ride,
u come to fair Tweed side;
Delrose's holy pile
'u the monk of St. Mary's aisle.
the father well from me;
that the fated hour is come,
-night he shall watch with thee,
win the treasure of the tomb:
will be Saint Michael's night,
ugh stars be dim, the moon is bright;
cross, of bloody red,
t to the grave of the mighty dead.

XXIII.
he gives thee, see thou keep;
thou for food or sleep.
ill, or be it book,
night, thou must not look;
asted, thou art lorn!
dst thou ne'er been born."

XXIV.
by can speed my dapplegray steed,
trinks of the Teviot clear;
Ere break of day," the warrior 'gan say,
   "Again will I be here:
And safer by none may thy errand be done,
   Than, noble dame, by me;
Letter nor line know I never a one,
   Wer't my neck-verse at Hairibe."*

XXV.
Soon in his saddle sate he fast,
And soon the steep descent he past,
Soon crossed the sounding barbican;†
And soon the Teviot's side he won.
Eastward the wooded path he rode,
Green hazels o' er his basnet nod:
He passed the Peel;‡ of Goldiland,
And crossed old Borthwick's roaring strand;
Dimly he viewed the moathill's mound,
Where Druid shades still flitted round:
In Hawick twinkled many a light;
Behind him soon they set in night;
And soon he spurred his courser keen
Beneath the tower of Hazeldean.

* Hairibe, the place of executing the Border marauders at Carlisle. The neck-verse is the beginning of the fifty-first psalm, Miserere mi, &c. anciently read by criminals, claiming the benefit of clergy.
† Barbican, the defence of the outer gate of a feudal castle.
‡ Peel, a Border tower.
Canto I. THE LAST MINSTREL. 23

XXVI.
The clattering hoofs the watchmen mark;—
"Stand, ho! thou courier of the dark."
"For Branksome, ho!" the knight rejoined,
And left the friendly tower behind.
He turned him now from Teviot side,
And, guided by the tinkling rill,
Northward the dark ascent did ride,
And gained the moor at Horselie hill;
Broad on the left before him lay,
For many a mile, the Roman way.*

XXVII.
A moment now he slacked his speed,
A moment breathed his panting steed;
Drew saddlegirth and corselet-band,
And loosened in the sheath his brand.
On mintocrags the moonbeams glint,
Where Barnhill hewed his bed of flint;
Who flung his outlawed limbs to rest,
Where falcons hang their giddy nest,
Mid cliffs, from whence his eagle eye,
For many a league, his prey could spy;
Cliffs, doubling, on their echoes borne,
The terrors of the robber's horn;
Cliffs, which, for many a later year,
The warbling Doric reed shall hear,

* An ancient Roman road, crossing through part of Rox-

[snip]
When some sad swain shall teach the grove,
Ambition is no cure for love.

XXVIII.
Unchallenged, thence past Deloraine
To ancient Riddell's fair domain,
Where Aill, from mountains freed,
Down from the lakes did raving come;
Each wave was crested with tawny foam,
Like the mane of a chestnut steed.
In vain! no torrent, deep or broad,
Might bar the bold mosstrooper's road.

XXIX.
At the first plunge the horse sunk low,
And the water broke o'er the saddle bow;
Above the foaming tide, I ween,
Scarce half the charger's neck was seen;
For he was barded* from counter to tail,
And the rider was armed complete in mail;
Never heavier man nor horse
Stemmed a midnight torrent's force.
The warrior's very plume, I say,
Was daggled by the dashing spray;
Yet, through good heart, and our Ladye's grace,
At length he gained the landing place.

* Barded, or barbed, applied to a horse accoutred with defensive armour.
Canto I.  THE LAST MINSTREL.

XXX.
Now Bowden moor the marchman won,
And sternly shook his plumed head,
As glanced his eye o'er Halidon;*
For on his soul the slaughter red
Of that unhallowed morn arose,
When first the Scott and Car were foes;
When royal James beheld the fray,
Prize to the victor of the day;
When Home and Douglas, in the van
Bore down Buccleuch's retiring clan,
Till gallant Cessford's heartblood dear
Reeked on dark Elliot's Border spear.

XXXI.
In bitter mood he spurred fast,
And soon the hated heath was past;
And far beneath, in lustre wan,
Old Melrose rose, and fair Tweed ran;
Like some tall rock, with lichens gray,
Seemed, dimly huge, the dark Abbaye.
When Hawick he passed, had curfew rung,
Now midnight lauds were in Melrose sung.
The sound, upon the fitful gale,
In solemn wise did rise and fail,
Like that wild harp, whose magic tone
Is wakened by the winds alone.

* Halidon-hill, on which the battle of Melrose was fought.
† Lauds, the midnight service of the Catholic church.
But when Melrose he reached, 'twas silence all;
He meetly stabled his steed in stall,
And sought the convent's lonely wall.

Here paused the harp, and with its swell
The master's fire and courage fell:
Dejectedly, and low, he bowed,
And, gazing timid on the crowd,
He seemed to seek, in every eye,
If they approved his minstrelsy;
And, diffident of present praise,
Somewhat he spoke of former days,
And how old age, and wandering long,
Had done his hand and harp some wrong.

The duchess and her daughters fair,
And every gentle ladye there,
Each after each, in due degree,
Gave praises to his melody;
His hand was true, his voice was clear,
And much they longed the rest to hear.
Encouraged thus, the Aged Man,
After meet rest, again began.
THE LAY

OF THE

LAST MINSTREL.

CANTO SECOND.
THE LAY

OF

THE LAST MINSTREL.

CANTO SECOND.

I.

On would'st view fair Melrose aright, sit it by the pale moonlight;
the gay beams of lightsome day out to flout the ruins gray.

The broken arches are black in night,
arch shafted oriel glimmers white;
the cold light's uncertain shower
ms on the ruined central tower;

Buttress and buttress, alternately,
framed of ebon and ivory;

Silver edges the imagery,
the scrolls that teach thee to live and die;

a distant Tweed is heard to rave,

owlet to boot o'er the dead man's grave.
Then go—but go alone the while—
Then view Saint David's ruined pile;
And home returning, soothly swear,
Was never scene so sad and fair!

II.
Short halt did Deloraine make there;
Little recked he of the scene so fair.
With dagger's hilt, on the wicket strong,
He struck full loud, and struck full long.
The porter hurried to the gate—
"Who knocks so loud, and knocks so late?"
"From Branksome I," the warrior cried;
And straight the wicket opened wide:
For Branksome's chiefs had in battle stood,
To fence the rights of fair Melrose;
And lands and livings, many a rood,
Had gifted the shrine for their soul's repos

III.
Bold Deloraine his errand said;
The porter bent his humble head;
With torch in hand, and feet unshod,
And noiseless step, the path he trod:
The arched cloisters, far and wide,
Rang to the warrior's clanking stride;
Till, stooping low his lofty crest,
He entered the cell of the ancient priest,
Canto II. THE LAST MINSTREL.

And lifted his barred aventayle,*
To hail the monk of Saint Mary's aisle.

IV.

"The Ladye of Branksome greets thee by me;
Says, that the fated hour is come,
And that to-night I shall watch with thee,
To win the treasure of the tomb."
From sackcloth couch the monk arose,
With toil his stiffened limbs he reared;
A hundred years had flung their snows
On his thin locks and floating beard.

V.

And strangely on the knight looked he,
And his blue eyes gleamed wild and wide;
"And, darest thou, warrior! seek to see
What heaven and hell alike would hide?
My breast, in belt of iron pent,
With shirt of hair and scourge of thorn;
For threescore years, in penance spent,
My knees those flinty stones have worn;
Yet all too little to atone
For knowing what should ne'er be known.
Would'st thou thy every future year
In ceaseless prayer and penance drie,
Yet wait thy latter end with fear—
Then, daring warrior, follow me!"

* Aventayle, visor of the helmet.
VI.

"Penance, father, will I none;
Prayer know I hardly one;
For mass or prayer can I rarely tarry,
Save to patter an Ave Mary,
When I ride on a Border foray:
Other prayer can I none;
So speed me my errand, and let me be gone."

VII.

Again on the knight looked the churchman old,
And again he sighed heavily:
For he had himself been a warrior bold,
And fought in Spain and Italy.
And he thought on the days that were long since by,
When his limbs were strong, and his courage was high:
Now, slow and faint, he led the way,
Where, cloistered round, the garden lay;
The pillared arches were over their head,
And beneath their feet were the bones of the dead.

VIII.

Spreading herbs, and flow'rets bright,
Glistened with the dew of night;
Nor herb, nor flow'ret, glistened there,
But was carved in the cloister arches as fair.
   The monk gazed long on the lovely moon,
   Then into the night he looked forth;
THE LAST MINSTREL.

\text{red and bright the streamers light}
\text{the dancing in the glowing north.}
\text{the seen, in fair Castile,}
\text{youth in glittering squadrons start;}
\text{in the flying jennet wheel,}
\text{hurl the unexpected dart}
\text{by the streamers that shot so bright,} \text{its were riding the northern light.}

IX.
\text{clenched postern door,}
\text{entered now the chancel tall;}
\text{ened roof rose high aloof}
\text{ars, lofty, and light, and small;}
\text{one, that locked each ribbed aisle,} \text{sur-de-lys, or a quatre-feuille;}
\text{ells* were carved grotesque and grim;}
\text{pillars, with clustered shafts so trim,}
\text{and with capital flourished around,}
\text{bundles of lances which garlands had bound.}

X.
\text{by a scutcheon and banner, riven,}
\text{the cold nightwind of heaven,}
\text{d the screened altar's pale;}
\text{Is, the projections from which the arches spring;}
\text{t in a fantastic face or mask.}
THE LAY OF

Canto II

And there the dying lamps did burn,
Before thy low and lonely urn,
O gallant chief of Otterburne!
  And thine, dark knight of Liddeendale!
O fading honours of the dead!
O high ambition lowly laid!

XI.
The moon on the east ariel shone
Through slender shafts of shapely stone,
  By foliated tracery combined;
Thou would'st have thought some fairy's hand
'Twixt poplars straight the osier wand,
  In many a freakish knot, had twined;
Then framed a spell when the work was done,
And changed the willow wreaths to stone.
The silver light, so pale and faint,
Showed many a prophet and many a saint
  Whose image on the glass was died;
Full in the midst, his cross of red
Triumphant Michael brandished,
  And trampled the apostate's pride.
The moonbeam kissed the holy pane,
And threw on the pavement a bloody stain.

XII.
They sate them down on a marble stone;
  (A Scottish monarch slept below:)
Thus spoke the monk, in solemn tone:—
"I was not always a man of wo;"
For Paynim countries I have trod,
And fought beneath the cross of God:
Now, strange to my eyes thine arms appear,
And their iron clang sounds strange to my ear.

XIII.

"In these far climes, it was my lot
To meet the wonderous Michael Scott;
A wizard of such dreaded fame,
That when, in Salamanca's cave,
Him listed his magic wand to wave,
The bells would ring in Notre Dame!
Some of his skill he taught to me;
And, warrior, I could say to thee
The words that cleft Eildon hills in three,
And bridled the Tweed with a curb of stone:
But to speak them were a deadly sin;
And for having but thought them my heart within,
A treble penance must be done.

XIV.

"When Michael lay on his dying bed,
His conscience was awakened;
He bethought him of his sinful deed,
And he gave me a sign to come with speed:
I was in Spain when the morning rose,
But I stood by his bed ere evening close.
The words may not again be said,
That he spoke to me, on death-bed laid;
They would rend this Abbaye's massy nave,
And pile it in heaps above his grave.

XV.
"I swore to bury his mighty book,
That never mortal might therein look;
And never to tell where it was hid,
Save at his chief of Branksome's need:
And when that need was past and o'er,
Again the volume to restore.
I buried him on Saint Michael's night,
When the bell tolled one, and the moon was
And I dug his chamber among the dead,
When the floor of the chancel was stained red,
That his patron's cross might over him wave,
And scare the fiends from the wizard's grave.

XVI.
"It was a night of wo and dread,
When Michael in the tomb I laid!
Strange sounds along the chancel past;
The banners waved without a blast,"
---Still spoke the monk, when the bell tolled:
I tell you, that a braver man
Than William of Deloraine, good at need,
Against a foe ne'er spurred a steed;
Yet somewhat was he chilled with dread,
And his hair did bristle upon his head.
Canto II. THE LAST MINSTREL.

XVII.
"Lo, warrior! now, the cross of red,
Points to the grave of the mighty dead;
Within it burns a wonderous light
To chase the spirits that love the night:
That lamp shall burn unquenchably,
Until the eternal doom shall be."
Slow moved the monk to the broad flag-stone,
Which the bloody cross was traced upon:
He pointed to a secret nook:
An iron bar the warrior took;
And the monk made a sign with his withered hand,
The grave's huge portal to expand.

XVIII.
With beating heart, to the task he went:
His sinewy frame o'er the grave-stone bent;
With bar of iron heaved amain,
Till the toil drops fell from his brows, like rain.
It was by dint of passing strength,
That he moved the massy stone at length.
I would you had been there, to see
How the light broke forth so gloriously,
Streamed upward to the chancel roof,
And through the galleries far aloof!
No earthly flame blazed e'er so bright:
It shone like heaven's own blessed light;
And, issuing from the tomb,
Showed the monk's cowl and visage pale,
Danced on the dark-brown warrior's mail,
And kissed his waving plume.

XIX.
Before their eyes the wizard lay,
As if he had not been dead a day.
His hoary beard in silver rolled,
He seemed some seventy winters old;
A palmer's amice wrapped him round;
With a wrought Spanish baldric bound,
Like a pilgrim from beyond the sea:
His left hand held his book of might;
A silver cross was in his right:
The lamp was placed beside his knee:
High and majestic was his look,
At which the fellest fiends had shook,
And all unruffled was his face—
They trusted his soul had gotten grace.

XX.
Often had William of Deloraine;
Rode through the battle's bloody plain,
And trampled down the warriors slain,
And neither known remorse nor awe;
Yet now remorse and awe he owned;
His breath came thick; his head swam round,
When this strange scene of death he saw.
Bewildered and unnerved he stood,
And the priest prayed fervently, and loud:
Canto II. THE LAST MINSTREL.

With eyes averted, prayed he,
He might not endure the sight to see,
Of the man he had loved so brotherly.

XXI.
And when the priest his death-prayer had prayed,
Thus unto Deloraine he said:—
"Now, speed thee what thou hast to do,
Or, warrior, we may dearly rue;
For those, thou may'st not look upon,
Are gathering fast round the yawning stone!"—
Then Deloraine, in terror, took
From the cold hand the mighty book,
With iron clasped, and with iron bound:
He thought, as he took it, the dead man frowned;
But the glare of the sepulchral light,
Perchance, had dazzled the warrior's sight.

XXII.
When the huge stone sunk o'er the tomb,
The night returned, in double gloom;
For the moon had gone down, and the stars were few;
And, as the knight and priest withdrew,
With wavering steps and dizzy brain,
They hardly might the postern gain.
'Tis said as through the aisles they passed,
They heard strange noises on the blast;
And through the cloister-galleries small,
Which at midnight thread the chancel wall.
Loud sobs, and laughter louder, ran,
And voices unlike the voice of man;
As if the fiends kept holiday,
Because these spells were brought to day.
I cannot tell how the truth may be;
I say the tale as 'twas said to me.

XXIII.
"Now, hie thee hence," the father said;
"And, when we are on death-bed laid,
O may our dear Ladye, and sweet Saint John,
Forgive our souls for the deed we have done!"
The monk returned him to his cell,
And many a prayer and penance sped;
When the convent met at the noontide bell—
The monk of Saint Mary's aisle was dead!
Before the cross was the body laid,
With hands clasped fast, as if still he prayed.

XXIV.
The knight breathed free in the morning wind,
And strove his hardihood to find:
He was glad when he passed the tombstones gray
Which girdle round the fair Abbaye;
For the mystic book, to his bosom prest,
Felt like a load upon his breast;
And his joints, with nerves of iron twined,
Shook, like the aspen leaves in wind.
Full fain was he when the dawn of day
Began to brighten Cheviot gray;
Canto II.  THE LAST MINSTREL. 41.

He joyed to see the cheerful light,
And he said Ave Mary, as well as he might.

XXV.
The sun had brightened Cheviot gray,
The sun had brightened the Carter's side;
And soon beneath the rising day
Smiled Branksome's towers and Teviot's tide.
The wild birds told their warbling tale;
And wakened every flower that blows;
And peeped forth the violet pale,
And spread her breast the mountain rose:
And lovelier than the rose so red,
Yet paler than the violet pale,
She early left her sleepless bed,
The fairest maid of Teviotdale.

XXVI.
Why does fair Margaret so early awake,
And don her kirtle so hastillie; [make,
And the silken knots, which in hurrie she would
Why tremble her slender fingers to tie?
Why does she stop, and look often around,
As she glides down the secret stair;
And why does she pat the shaggy blood-hound,
As he rouses him up from his lair:
And, though she passes the postern alone,
Why is not the watchman's bugle blown?

* A mountain on the border of England, above Jedburgh.
THE LAY OF

Canto II.

XXVII.
The Ladye steps in doubt and dread,
Lest her watchful mother hear her tread;
The Ladye caresses the rough blood-hound,
Lest his voice should waken the castle round;
The watchman's bugle is not blown,
For he was her foster-father's son; [light,
And she glides through the greenwood at dawn of
To meet Baron Henry, her own true knight.

XXVIII.
The knight and ladye fair are met,
And under the hawthorn's boughs are set,
A fairer pair were never seen
To meet beneath the hawthorn green.
He was stately, and young, and tall;
Dreaded in battle, and loved in hall:
And she, when love, scarce told, scarce hid,
Lent to her cheek a livelier red;
When the half sigh her swelling breast
Against the silken riband prest;
When her blue eyes their secret told,
Though shaded by her locks of gold,—
Where would you find the peerless fair
With Margaret of Branksome might compare!

XXIX.
And now, fair dames, methinks I see
You listen to my minstrelsy;
Canto II.  THE LAST MINSTREL.

Your waving locks ye backward throw,
And sidelong bend your necks of snow:
Ye ween to hear a melting tale
Of two true lovers in a dale;
And how the knight, with tender fire,
To paint his faithful passion strove;
Sware he might at her feet expire,
But never, never cease to love;
And how she blushed, and how she sighed,
And, half consenting, half denied,
And said that she would die a maid;
Yet, might the bloody feud be stayed,
Henry of Cranstoun, and only he,
Margaret of Branksome's choice should be.

XXX.

Alas! fair dames, your hopes are vain!
My harp has lost the enchanting strain;
Its lightness would my age reprove:
My hairs are gray, my limbs are old,
My heart is dead, my veins are cold:
I may not, must not, sing of love.

XXXI.

Beneath an oak, mossed o'er by e'ld,
The baron's dwarf his courser held,
And held his crested helm and spear.
That dwarf was scarce an earthly man,
If the tales were true, that of him ran Through all the Border, far and near.
'Twas said, when the baron a hunting rode,
Through Reedsdale's glens, but rarely trod,
He heard a voice cry, "Lost! lost! lost!"
And, like tennisball by raquet tost,
A leap, of thirty feet and three,
Made from the gorse this elfin shape,
Distorted like some dwarfish ape,
And lighted at Lord Cranstoun's knee.
Lord Cranstoun was some whit dismayed,
'Tis said that five good miles he rade,
To rid him of his company;
But where he rode one mile, the dwarf ran four
And the dwarf was first at the castle door.

XXXII.
Use lessens marvel, it is said.
This elvish dwarf with the baron staid;
Little he ate, and less he spoke,
Nor mingled with the menial flock:
And oft apart his arms he tossed,
And often muttered, "Lost! lost! lost!"
He was waspish, arch, and litherlie,
But well Lord Cranstoun served he;
And he of his service was full fain;
For once he had been ta'en or slain,
An' it had not been his ministry.
All, between Home and Hermitage,
Talked of Lord Cranstoun's goblin page.
Canto II.  THE LAST MINSTREL.

XXXIII.
For the baron went on pilgrimage,
And took with him this elvish page,
   To Mary's chapel of the Lowes:
For there, beside our Ladye's lake,
An offering he had sworn to make,
   And he would pay his vows.
But the Ladye of Branksome gathered a band
Of the best that would ride at her command;
The trysting place was Newark Lee.
Wat of Harden came thither amain,
And thither came John of Thirlestaine,
And thither came William of Deloraine;
   They were three hundred spears and three.
Through Douglas-burn, up Yarrow stream,
Their horses prance, their lances gleam.
They came to saint Mary's lake ere day;
But the chapel was void, and the baron away.
They burned the chapel for very rage,
And cursed Lord Cranstoun's goblin page.

XXXIV.
And now, in Branksome's good green wood,
As under the aged oak he stood,
The baron's courser pricks his ears,
   As if a distant noise he hears.
The dwarf waves his long lean arm on high,
And signs to the lovers to part and fly;
   No time was then to vow or sigh.
Fair Margaret, through the hazel grove,
Flew like the startled cushat dove:*
The dwarf the stirrup held and rein;
Vaulted the knight on his steed amain,
And, pondering deep that morning's scene,
Rode eastward through the hawthorns green.

---

While thus he poured the lengthened tale,
The Minstrel's voice began to fail;
Full slyly smiled the observant page,
And gave the withered hand of age
A goblet, crowned with mighty wine,
The blood of Velez scorched vine.
He raised the silver cup on high,
And, while the big drop filled his eye,
Prayed God to bless the duchess long,
And all who cheered a son of song.
The attending maidens smiled to see,
How long, how deep, how zealously,
The precious juice the Minstrel quaffed;
And he, emboldened by the draught,
Looked gaily back to them, and lauded.
The cordial nectar of the bowl
Swelled his old veins, and cheered his soul;
A lighter, livelier prelude ran,
Ere thus his tale again began.

* Wood pigeon.
THE LAY

OF THE

LAST MINSTREL.

CANTO THIRD.
THE LAY

OF

THE LAST MINSTREL.

CANTO THIRD.

I.

And said I that my limbs were old;
And said I that my blood was cold,
And that my kindly fire was fled,
And my poor withered heart was dead.

And that I might not sing of love?
How could I to the dearest theme,
That ever warmed a Minstrel’s dream,
So foul, so false a recreant prove!

How could I name love’s very name,
Nor wake my harp to notes of flame!

II.

In peace, Love tunes the shepherd’s reed,
In war, he mounts the warrior’s steed;
In halls, in gay attire is seen;
In hamlets, dances on the green.
THE LAY OF

Canto I

Love rules the court, the camp, the grove,
And men below, and saints above;
For love is heaven, and heaven is love.

III.
So thought Lord Cranstoun, as I ween,
While, pondering deep the tender scene,
He rode through Branksome's hawthorn green.
But the page shouted wild and shrill,
And scarce his helmet could he don,
When downward from the shady hill
A stately knight came pricking on.
That warrior's steed so dapple-gray
Was dark with sweat, and splashed with clay;
His armour red with many a stain:
He seemed in such a weary plight,
As if he had ridden the livelong night;
For it was William of Deloraine.

IV.
But no whit weary did he seem,
When, dancing in the sunny beam,
He marked the crane on the baron's crest;
For his ready spear was in his rest.
Few were the words, and stern, and high,
That marked the foemen's feudal hate;
For question fierce, and proud reply,
Gave signal soon of dire debate.
Their very coursers seemed to know,
That each was other's mortal foe;
Canto III. THE LAST MINSTREL.
And snorted fire, when wheeled around,
To give each knight his vantage ground.

V.
In rapid round the baron bent;
He sighed a sigh, and prayed a prayer:
The prayer was to his patron saint,
The sigh was to his ladye fair.
Stout Deloraine nor sighed, nor prayed,
Nor saint, nor ladye, called to aid;
But he stooped his head and couched his spear,
And spurred his steed to full career.
The meeting of these champions proud
Seemed like the bursting thunder-cloud.

VI.
Stern was the dint the borderer lent!
The stately baron backwards bent;
Bent backwards to his horse's tail,
And his plumes went scattering on the gale;
The tough ash spear, so stout and true,
Into a thousand flinders flew.
But Cranstoun's lance, of more avail,
Pierced through, like silk, the borderer's mail;
Through shield, and jack, and acton past,
Deep in his bosom, broke at last.
Still sate the warrior saddle fast,
Till, stumbling in the mortal shock,
Down went the steed, the girthing broke,
Hurled on a heap lay man and horse.
The baron onward passed his course;
Nor knew, so giddy rolled his brain,
His foe lay stretched upon the plain.

VII.
But when he reined his courser round,
And saw his foeman on the ground
Lie senseless as the bloody clay,
He bade his page to stanch the wound,
And there beside the warrior stay,
And tend him in his doubtful state,
And lead him to Branksome castle-gate;
His noble mind was inly moved
For the kinsman of the maid he loved,
"This shalt thou do without delay;
No longer here myself may stay;
Unless the swifter I speed away,
Short thrift will be at my dying day."

VIII.
Away in speed Lord Cranstoun rode;
The goblin-page behind abode:
His lord's command he ne'er withstood,
Though small his pleasure to do good.
As the corselet off he took,
The dwarf espied the mighty book!
Much he marvelled, a knight of pride,
Like a book-bosomed priest should ride:
Canto III. THE LAST MINSTREL.

He thought not to search or stanch the woun
Until the secret he had found.

IX.
The iron band, the iron clasp,
Resisted long the elfin grasp;
For when the first he had undone,
It closed as he the next begun.
Those iron clasps, that iron band,
Would not yield to unchristened hand,
Till he smeared the cover o'er
With the Borderer's curdled gore;
A moment then the volume spread,
And one short spell therein he read.
It had much of glamour* might,
Could make a lady seem a knight;
The cobwebs on a dungeon wall,
Seem tapestry in lordly hall;
A nutshell seem a gilded barge,
A sheeling† seem a palace large,
And youth seem age, and age seem youth;
All was delusion, nought was truth.

X.
He had not read another spell,
When on his cheek a buffet fell,
So fierce, it stretched him on the plain,
Beside the wounded Deloraine.

* Magical delusion.
† A shepherd's lay.
THE LAY OF

and he rose dismayed,
huge and matted head;
muttered, and no more—
"thou smitest sore!"— elfin page durst try ponderous book to pry;
though smeared with Christian gore,
than they were before.
underneath his cloak.—
ask who gave the stroke,
all, so mot I thrive;
given by man alive.

XI.

gly himself he addressed,
royal’s high behest:
ed up the living corse,
ed it on the weary horse;
him into Branksome hall,
the beards of the warders all;
who did after swear and say,
only passed a wain of hay.
ok him to Lord David’s tower,
to the Ladye’s secret bower;
but that stronger spells were spread,
the door might not be opened,
had laid him on her very bed.
ate’er he did of gramarye,*
as always done maliciously;

* Magic.
Canto III. THE LAST MINSTREL.  55

He flung the warrior on the ground,
And the blood welled freshly from the wound.

XII.

As he repassed the outer court,
He spied the fair young child at sport;
He thought to train him to the wood;
For, at a word, be it understood,
He was always for ill, and never for good.
Seemed to the boy, some comrade gay
Led him forth to the woods to play;
On the drawbridge the warders stout
Saw a terrier and lurcher passing out.

XIII.

He led the boy o'er bank and fell,
Until they came to a woodland brook;
The running stream dissolved the spell,
And his old elvish shape he took.
Could he have had his pleasure vile,
He had crippled the joints of the noble child;
Or, with his fingers long and lean,
Had strangled him in fiendish spleen:
But his awful mother he had in dread,
And also his power was limited;
So he but scowled on the startled child,
And darted through the forest wild;
The woodland brook he bounding crossed,
And laughed, and shouted, "Lost! lost! lost!"
XIV.

Full sore amazed at the wonderous change,
    And frightened, as a child might be,
At the wild yell and visage strange,
    And the dark words of gramarye,
The child, amidst the forest bower,
Stood rooted like a lilye flower;
    And when at length, with trembling pace,
He sought to find where Branksome lay,
He feared to see that grisly face
    Glare from some thicket on his way.
Thus, starting oft, he journeyed on,
And deeper in the wood is gone,—
For aye the more he sought his way,
The further still he went astray,
Until he heard the mountains round
Ring to the baying of a hound.

XV.

And hark! and hark! the deep-mouthed bark
Comes nigher still, and nigher;
Bursts on the path a dark blood-hound,
His tawny muzzle tracked the ground,
    And his red eye shot fire.
Soon as the wildered child saw he,
He flew at him right furiouslie.
I ween you would have seen with joy
The bearing of the gallant boy,
When, worthy of his noble sire,
His wet cheek glowed 'twixt fear and ire!
THE LAST MINSTREL.

the blood-hound manfully,
his little bat on high:
he struck, the dog, afraid,
as distance hoarsely bayed,
il in act to spring;
shed an archer through the glade,
he saw the hound was stayed,
with his tough bowstring:
gh voice cried, "Shoot not, boy!
't not Edward—'tis a boy!"

XVI.

ker issued from the wood,
ked his fellow's surly mood,
elled the ban-dog's ire.
English yeoman good,
orn in Lancashire:
l he hit a fallow deer,
red feet him fro;
more true and eye more clear,
er bended bow.
black hair, shorn round and close,
his sun-burned face,
and's sign, Saint George's cross,
ret-cap did grace;
born hung by his side,
wolf-skin baldric tied:
short falchion, sharp and clear,
ced the throat of many a deer.
THE LAY OF

XVII.
His kirtle made of forest green,
    Reached scantily to his knee;
And, at his belt, of arrows keen
    A furbished sheaf bore he;
His buckler scarce in breadth a span,
    No longer fence had he;
He never counted him a man
    Would strike below the knee;
His slackened bow was in his hand,
And the leash, that was his blood-hound's ban

XVIII.
He would not do the fair child harm,
But held him with his powerful arm,
That he might neither fight nor flee;
For when the red cross spied he,
The boy strove long and violently.
"Now, by Saint George," the archer cries,
"Edward, methinks we have a prize!
This boy's fair face, and courage free,
Shows he is come of high degree."—

XIX.
"Yes! I am come of high degree,
    For I am the heir of bold Buccleuch;
And, if thou dost not set me free,
    False southeron, thou shalt dearly rue!
Canto III.  THE LAST MINSTREL.

For Walter of Harden shall come with speed,
And William of Deloraine, good at need,
And every Scott from Eske to Tweed;
And, if thou dost not let me go,
Despite thy arrows, and thy bow,
I'll have thee hanged to feed the crow!"

XX.
"Gramercy, for thy good will, fair boy;
My mind was never set so high;
But if thou art chief of such a clan,
And art the son of such a man,
And ever comest to thy command,
Our wardens had need to keep good order:
My bow of yew to a hazel wand,
Thou'll make them work upon the Border.
Meantime, be pleased to come with me,
For good Lord Dacre shalt thou see;
I think our work is well begun,
When we have taken thy father's son."

XXI.
Although the child was led away,
In Branksome still he seemed to stay,
For so the dwarf his part did play;
And, in the shape of that young boy,
He wrought the castle much annoy.
The comrades of the young Buccleuch
He pinched, and beat, and overthrew;
Nay, some of them he well nigh slew.
He tore Dame Maudlin's silken tire,
And, as Sym Hall stood by the fire,
He lighted the match of his bandelier,*
And woefully scorched the hackbutteer.†
It may be hardly thought or said,
The mischief that the urchin made,
Till many of the castle guessed,
That the young baron was possessed!

XXII.
Well I ween, the charm he held
The noble Ladye had soon dispelled;
But she was deeply busied then
To tend the wounded Deloraine.
Much she wondered to find him lie,
On the stone threshold stretched along;
She thought some spirit of the sky
Had done the bold moss-trooper wrong,
Because, despite her precept dread,
Perchance he in the book had read;
But the broken lance in his bosom stood,
And it was earthly steel and wood.

XXIII.
She drew the splinter from the wound,
And with a charm she stanchèd the blood;

* Bandelier, belt for carrying ammunition.
† Hackbutteer, musketeer.
Canto III. THE LAST MINSTREL.

She bade the gash be cleansed and bound;
No longer by his couch she stood;
But she has ta'en the broken lance,
And washed it from the clotted gore,
And salved the splinter o'er and o'er.

William of Deloraine, in trance,
Whene'er she turned it round and round,
Twisted, as if she galled his wound,
Then to her maidens she did say,
That he should be whole man and sound,
Within the course of a night and day.

Full long she toiled: for she did rue
Mishap to friend so stout and true.

XXIV.

So passed the day—the evening fell,
'Twas near the time of curfew bell;
The air was mild, the wind was calm,
The stream was smooth, the dew was balm;
E'en the rude watchman on the tower,
Enjoyed and blessed the lovely hour,
Far more fair Margaret loved and blessed
The hour of silence and of rest.

On the high turret sitting lone,
She waked at times the lute's soft tone;
Touched a wild note, and all between
Thought of the bower of hawthorns green.
Her golden hair streamed free from band,
Her fair cheek rested on her hand,
Her blue eye sought the west afar,
For lovers love the western star.

XXV.
Is yon the star, o'er Penchryst Pen,
That rises slowly to her ken,
And spreading broad its wavering light,
Shakes its loose tresses on the night?
Is yon red glare the western star?—
O, 'tis the beacon blaze of war!
Scarce could she draw her tightened breath,
For well she knew the fire of death!

XXVI.
The warder viewed it blazing strong,
And blew his warnote loud and long,
Till, at the high and haughty sound,
Rock, wood, and river, rang around.
The blast alarmed the festal hall,
And startled forth the warriors all;
Far downward in the castle-yard,
Full many a torch and cresset glared;
And helms and plumes, confusedly tossed,
Were in the blaze half-seen, half-lost;
And spears in wild disorder shook,
Like reeds beside a frozen brook.

XXVII.
The Seneschal, whose silver hair
Was reddened by the torches' glare,
Canto III. THE LAST MINSTREL.

Stood in the midst, with gesture proud,
And issued forth his mandates loud,
"On Penchryst glows a bale of fire,
And three are kindling on Priesthaughswire;
Ride out, ride out,
The foe to scout!
Mount, mount, for Branksome,† every man!
Thou, Todrig, warn the Johnstone clan,
That ever are true and stout.
Ye need not send to Liddlesdale;
For, when they see the blazing bale,
Elliots and Armstrongs never fail.—
Ride, Alton, ride, for death and life!
And warn the warden of the strife.
Young Gilbert, let your beacon blaze,
Our kin, and clan, and friends, to raise."

XXVIII.

Fair Margaret from the turret head,
Heard, far below, the courser’s tread,
While loud the harness rung,
As to their seats with clamour dread,
The ready horsemen sprung;
And trampling hoofs, and iron coats,
And leaders’ voices’ mingled notes,
And out! and out!
In hasty route,

* Bale, a beacon-faggot.
† Mount for Branksome was the gathering word of the Scott.
The horsemen galloped forth;
Dispersing to the south to scout,
    And east, and west, and north,
To view their coming enemies,
And warn their vassals and allies.

XXIX.

The ready page, with hurried hand,
Awaked the need-fire's* slumbering brand
    And ruddy blushed the heaven:
For a sheet of flame, from the turret high
Waved like a bloodflag on the sky,
    All flaring and uneven;
And soon a score of fires, I ween,
From height, and hill, and cliff, were seen
Each with warlike tidings fraught;
Each from each the signal caught;
Each after each they glanced to sight,
As stars arise upon the night.
They gleamed on many a dusky tarn,†
Haunted by the lonely earn;‡
On many a cairn's§ gray pyramid,
Where urns of mighty chiefs lie hid;
Till high Dunedin the blazes saw;
From Soltra and Dumpender Law;
And Lothian heard the regent's order,
That all should bowne∥ them for the Bor

* Need-fire, beacon.  † Tarn, a moun
‡ Earn, the Scottish eagle. § Cairn, a pil ∥ Bowne, made ready.
Canto III. THE LAST MINSTREL. 65

XXX.
The livelong night in Branksome rang
The ceaseless sound of steel:
The castle-bell, with backward clang,
Sent forth the larum peal;
Was frequent heard the heavy jar,
Where massy stone and iron bar
Were piled on echoing keep and tower,
To whelm the foe with deadly shower;
Was frequent heard, the changing guard,
And watchword from the sleepless ward;
While, wearied by the endless din,
Blood-hound and ban-dog yelled within.

XXXI.
The noble dame, amid the broil,
Shared the gray Seneschal’s high toil,
And spoke of danger with a smile;
Cheered the young knights, and council sage
Held with the chiefs of riper age.
No tidings of the foe were brought,
Nor of his numbers knew they aught,
Nor in what time the truce he sought.
Some said, that there were thousands ten;
And others weened that it was nought
But Leven clans, or Tynedale men,
Who came to gather in black mail;*

* Protection money exacted by free-booters.

6*
And Liddesdale, with small avail,
Might drive them lightly back again.
So passed the anxious night away,
And welcome was the peep of day.

Ceased the high sound—the listening thro' the Master of the song;
Applaud and marvel much, in helpless age,
So hard should be his pilgrimage.
Had he no friend, no daughter dear,
His wandering toil to soothe and cheer;
No son, to be his father's stay,
And guide him on the rugged way?
"Ay, once he had—but he was dead!"
Upon the harp he stooped his head,
And busied himself the strings withal,
To hide the tear, that fain would fall.
In solemn measure soft and slow,
Arose a father's notes of wo.
THE LAY

OF THE

LAST MINSTREL.

CANTO FOURTH.
THE LAY

OF

THE LAST MINSTREL.

CANTO FOURTH.

I.
Sweet Teviot! on thy silver tide
The glaring bale-fires blase no more;
No longer steel-clad warriors ride
Along thy wild and willowed shore;
Where'er thou wind'st by dale or hill
All, all is peaceful, all is still;
As if thy waves, since time was born,
Since first they rolled their way to Tweed;
Had only heard the shepherd's reed,
Nor startled at the bugle-bred.

II.
Unlike the tide of human time,
Which, though it change in ceaseless flow,
Retains each grief, retains each crime,
Its earliest course was doomed to know.
And, darker as it downward bears,
Is stained with past and present tears.
Low as that tide has ebbed with me,
It still reflects to memory's eye
The hour, my brave, my only boy,
Fell by the side of great Dundee.
Why, when the volleying musket played
Against the bloody Highland blade,
Why was I not beside him laid!—
Enough—he died the death of fame;
Enough—he died with conquering Græme.

III.
Now over border, dale and fell,
Full wide and far was terror spread;
For pathless march, and mountain cell,
The peasant left his lowly shed.
The frightened flocks and herds were pent
Beneath the peel's rude battlement;
And maids and matrons dropped the tear,
While ready warriors seized the spear.
From Branksome's towers, the watchman's ey
Dun wreaths of distant smoke can spy,
Which, curling in the rising sun,
Showed southern ravage was begun.

IV.
Now loud the heedful gate-ward cried—
"Prepare ye all for blows and blood!"
at Tinlinn, from the Liddle-side,
Comes wading through the flood.
Il oft the Tynedale snatchers knock his lone gate, and prove the lock;
C was but last Saint Barnabright
ey sieged him a whole summer night, fled at morning; well they knew,
vain he never twanged the yew.
ght sharp has been the evening shower,
at drove him from his Liddle tower;
d, by my faith," the gate-ward said,
think 'twill prove a Warden-raid."

V. ile thus he spoke, the bold yeoman
tered the echoing barbican, led a small and shaggy nag,
at through a bog, from hag to hag,†
do bound like any Bilhope stag.
ore his wife and children twain;
ulf-clothed serf‡ was all their train:
ife, stout, ruddy, and dark-browed,
silver broach and bracelet proud,
ughed to her friends among the crowd.
was of stature passing tall,
sparely formed, and lean withal:

* An inroad commanded by the warden in person.
† The broken ground in a bog. ‡ Bondsman.
A battered morion on his brow;
A leathern jack, as fence enow,
On his broad shoulders loosely hung;
A border ax behind was slung;
   His spear, six Scottish ells in length,
Seemed newly died with gore;
   His shafts and bow, of wonderous streng
His hardy partner bore.

VI.
Thus to the ladye did Tinlinn show
The tidings of the English foe:—
   "Belted Will Howard is marching here,
And hot Lord Dacre, with many a spear,
And all the German hagbut-men, *
Who long have lain at Askerten:
   They crossed the Liddle at curfew hour,
And burned my little lonely tower;
The fiend receive their souls therefor!
It had not been burned this year and more.
Barn-yard and dwelling blazing bright,
Served to guide me on my flight;
But I was chased the live-long night.
Black John of Akeshaw, and Fergus Gruem
Fast upon my traces came,
Until I turned at Priestthanghscrogg,
And shot their horses in the bog,

* Musketeers.
IV. THE LAST MINSTREL.

'tergus with my lance outright—
im long at high despite:
'ove my cows last Fastern's night."

VII.

'ermly scouts from Liddesdale,
'arrying in, confirmed the tale;
as they could judge by ken,
se hours would bring to Teviot's strand thousand armed Englishmen.
nwhile, full many a warlike band,
Teviot, Aill, and Ettricke shade,
in, their chief's defence to aid.
was saddling and mounting in haste,
re was prickling o'er moor and lee;
't was last at the trysting place
but lightly held of his gay Ladys.

VIII.

fair Saint Mary's silver wave,
m dreary Gamescleuch's dusky height,
ady lances Thirlestane brave
yed beneath a banner bright.
ressed fleur-de-luce he claims ath his shield, since royal James,
'd by Fala's mossy wave,
oud distinction grateful gave,
faith mid feudal jars;
What time, save Thirlestane alone,
Of Scotland's stubborn barons none
Would march to southern wars;
And hence, in fair remembrance worn,
Yon sheaf of spears his crest has borne;
Hence his high motto shines revealed—
"Ready, aye ready," for the field.

IX.
An aged knight, to danger steeled,
With many a moss-trooper, came on;
And sure in a golden field,
The stars and crescent graced his shield,
Without the bend of Murdieston.
Wide lay his lands round Oakwood tower,
And wide round haunted Castle-ower;
High over Borthwick's mountain flood,
His wood-embosomed mansion stood;
In the dark glen, so deep below,
The herds of plundered England low;
His bold retainers' daily food,
And bought with danger, blows, and blood.
Marauding chief his sole delight
The moonlight raid, the morning fight;
Not even the flower of Yarrow's charms,
In youth, might tame his rage for arms;
And still, in age, he spurned at rest,
And still his brows the helmet pressed,
Albeit the blanched locks below
Were white as Dinlay's spotless snow:
Canto IV. THE LAST MINSTREL.

Five stately warriors drew the sword
Before their father's band;
A braver knight than Harden's lord
Ne'er belted on a brand.

X.
Scotts of Eskdale, a stalwart band,
Came trooping down the Todshawhill;
By the sword they won their land,
And by the sword they hold it still.

Hearken, Ladye, to the tale,
How thy sires won fair Eskdale.—
Earl Morton was lord of that valley fair,
The Beattisons were his vassals there.
The Earl was gentle, and mild of mood,
The vassals were warlike, and fierce, and rude;
High of heart, and haughty of word,
Little they recked of a tame liege lord.
The Earl to fair Eskdale came,
Homage and Seignory to claim:
Of Gilbert the Galliard, a heriot he sought, Saying, "Give thy best steed as a vassal ought."
—"Dear to me is my bonny white steed,
Oft has he helped me at pinch of need;
Lord and Earl though thou be, I trow,
I can rein Buckefoot better than thou."

*The feudal superior, in certain cases, was entitled to the best horse of the vassal, in name of Heriot, or Herexeld,
Word on word gave fuel to fire,
Till so highly blazed the Beattison's ire,
But that the Earl to flight had ta'en,
The vassals there their lord had slain.
Sore he plied both whip and spur,
As he urged his steed through Eskdale muir;
And it fell down a weary weight,
Just on the threshold of Branksome gate.

XI.

The Earl was a wrathful man to see,
Full fain avenged would he be.
In haste to Branksome's lord he spoke,
Saying—"Take these traitors to thy yoke;
For a cast of hawks, and a purse of gold,
All Eskdale I'll see thee, to have and hold:
Be shrrew thy heart, of the Beattison's clan
If thou leavest on Eake a landed man:
But spare Woodkerrick's lands alone,
For he lent me his horse to escape upon."—
A glad man then was Branksome bold,
Down he flung him the purse of gold;
To Eskdale soon he spurred amain,
And with him five hundred riders has ta'en.
He left his merry men in the midst of the hill;
And bade them hold them close and still;
And alone he wended to the plain,
To meet with the Galliard and all his train.
To Gilbert the Galliard thus he said:—
"Know thou me for thy liege lord and head;"
Canto IV.  THE LAST MINSTREL.  77

Deal not with me as with Morton tame,
For Scotts play best at the roughest game.
Give me in peace my heriot due,
Thy bonny white steed, or thou shalt rue.
If my horn I three times wind,
Eskdale shall long have the sound in mind."

XII.
Loudly the Beattison laughed in scorn;—
"Little care we for thy winded horn.
Ne'er shall it be the Galliard's lot,
To yield his steed to a haughty Scott.
Wend thou to Branksome back on foot,
With rusty spur and miry boot."—
He blew his bugle so loud and hoarse,
That the dan deer started at far Craikcross;
He blew again so loud and clear,
Through the gray mountain mist there did lances appear;
And the third blast rang with such a din,
That the echoes answered from Pentoun-linn;
And all his riders came lightly in.
Then had you seen a gallant shock,
When saddles were emptied and lances broke!
For each scornful word the Galliard had said,
A Beattison on the field was laid.
His own good sword the chieftain drew,
And he bore the Galliard through and through;
Where the Beattison's blood mixed with the vill,
The Galliard's Haugh, men call it still.
The Scotts have scattered the Beattison clan,
In Eskedale they left but one landed man.
The valley of Eake, from the mouth to the sour
Was lost and won for that bonny white horse.

XIII.
Whitslade the Hawk, and Headshaw came,
And warriors more than I may name;
From Yarrow-cleuch to Hindhaugh-swaier,
From Woodhousecle to Chester-glen,
Trooped man and horse, and bow and spear;
Their gathering word was Bellenden.
And better hearts o'er Border sod
To siege or rescue never rode.
The Ladye marked the aids come in,
And high her heart of pride arose:
She bade her youthful son attend,
That he might know his father's friend,
And learn to face his foes.
"The boy is ripe to look on war;
I saw him draw a cross-bow stiff,
And his true arrow struck afar
The raven's nest upon the cliff;
The red cross, on a southern breast,
Is broader than the raven's nest:
Thou, Whitslade, shall teach him his weapon wield.
And over him hold his father's shield."
Canto IV.  THE LAST MINSTREL.  79

XIV.
Well may you think, the wily page
Cared not to face the Ladye sage.
He counterfeited childish fear,
And shrieked, and shed full many a tear,
   And moaned and plained in manner wild.
   The attendants to the Ladye told,
   Some fairy, sure, had changed the child,
   That wont to be so free and bold.
Then wrathful was the noble dame;
She blushed blood-red for very shame:—
   "Hence! ere the clan his faintness view:
   Hence with the weakling to Buccleuch!—
   Wat Tinlinn, thou shalt be his guide
   To Rangleburn's lonely side—
   Sure some fell fiend has cursed our line,
   That coward should e'er be son of mine!"

XV.
A heavy task Wat Tinlinn had,
To guide the counterfeited lad.
Soon as the palfrey felt the weight
Of that ill-omen'd elfish freight,
Be bolted, sprung, and reared amain,
Nor heeded bit, nor curb, nor rein.
It cost Wat Tinlinn mickle toil
To drive him but a Scottish mile;
80

THE LAY OF

Canto IV.

But, as a shallow brook they crossed,
The elf, amid the running stream,
His figure changed, like form in dream,
   And fled, and shouted, "Lost! lost! lost!"
Full fast the urchin ran and laughed,
But faster still a cloth-yard shaft
Whistled from startled Tinlinn's yew,
And pierced his shoulder through and through.
Although the imp might not be slain,
And though the wound soon healed again,
Yet, as he ran, he yelled for pain;
And Wat of Tinlinn, much aghast,
Rode back to Branksome fiery fast.

XXII.

Soon on the hill's steep verge he stood,
That looks o'er Branksome's towers and wood;
And martial murmurs from below,
Proclaimed the approaching southern foe.
Through the dark wood in mingled tone,
Were border-pipes and bugles blown;
The coursers' neighing he could ken,
And measured tread of marching men;
While broke at times the solemn hum,
The Almeyn's sullen kettle-drum;
   And banners tall, of crimson sheen,
   Above the copse appear;
And, glistening through the hawthorns green,
Shine helm, and shield, and spear.
XVII.
Light forayers first, to view the ground,
Spurred their fleet courser loosely round;
   Behind, in close array, and fast,
   The Kendal archers, all in green,
   Obedient to the bugle blast,
   Advancing from the wood are seen.
To back and guard the archer band,
Lord Dacre's bill-men were at hand:
   A hardy race, on Irthing bred,
   With kirtles white, and crosses red,
   Arrayed beneath the banner tall,
   That streamed o'er Acre's conquered wall:
   And minstrels, as they marched in order,
   Played, "Noble Lord Dacre, he dwells on the Border."

XVIII.
Behind the English bill and bow,
The mercenaries, firm and slow,
   Moved on to fight, in dark array,
By Conrad led of Wolfenstein,
Who brought the band from distant Rhine,
   And sold their blood for foreign pay.
The camp their home, their law the sword,
They knew no country, owned no lord:
They were not armed like England's sons,
But bore the levin-darting guns;
Buff-coats, all frownd and 'broidered o'er,
And morsing-horns* and scarfs they wore;
Each better knee was bared, to aid
The warriors in the escalade;
All, as they marched, in rugged tongue,
Songs of Teutonic feuds they sung.

XIX.
But louder still the clamour grew,
And louder still the minstrels blew,
When, from beneath the greenwood tree,
Rode forth lord Howard's Chivalry;
His men at arms, with glaive and spear,
Brought up the battle's glittering rear.
There many a youthful knight, full keen
To gain his spurs, in arms was seen;
With favour in his crest, or glove,
Memorial of his ladye-love.
So rode they forth in fair array,
Till full their lengthened lines display;
Then called a halt, and made a stand,
And cried, "Saint George for merry England!"

XX.
Now every English eye, intent,
On Branksome's armed towers was bent;
So near they were, that they might know
The straining harsh of each cross-bow.

* Powder-flasks.
Canto IV. THE LAST MINSTREL.

On battlement and bartizan
 Gleamed ax, and spear, and partisan;
 Falcon and culver,* on each tower,
 Stood prompt their deadly hail to shower;
 And flashing armour frequent broke
 From eddying whirls of sable smoke,
 Where, upon tower and turret head,
 The seething pitch and molten lead
 Reeked, like a witch's cauldron red.
 While yet they gazed, the bridges fall,
 The wicket opes, and from the wall
 Rides forth the hoary Seneschal.

XXI.
 Armed he rode, all save the head,
 His white beard o'er his breast-plate spread;
 Unbroke by age, erect his seat,
 He ruled his eager courser's gait;
 Forced him, with chastened fire, to prance,
 And, high curveting, slow advance:
 In sign of truce, his better hand
 Displayed a peeled willow wand;
 His squire, attending in the rear,
 Bore high a gauntlet on a spear.
 When they espied him riding out,
 Lord Howard and Lord Dacre stout
 Sped to the front of their array,
 To hear what this old knight should say.

* Ancient pieces of artillery.
THE LAY OF

XXII.
"Ye English warden lords, of you
Demands the Ladye of Buccleuch,
Why, 'gainst the truce of Border-tide,
In hostile guise ye dare to ride,
With Kendal bow, and Gilsland brand,
And all you mercenary band,
Upon the bounds of fair Scotland?
My Ladye reads you with return;
And, if but one poor straw you burn,
Or do our towers so much molest,
As scare one swallow from her nest;
Saint Mary! but we'll light a brand,
Shall warm your hearths in Cumberland."

XXIII.
A wrathful man was Dacre's lord,
But calmer Howard took the word:—
"'Tis please thy dame, sir Seneschal,
To seek the castle's outward wall,
Our pursuit-at-arms shall show,
Both why we came, and when we go."
The message sped, the noble dame
To the wall's outward circle came;
Each chief around leaned on his spear,
To see the pursuit appear.
All in Lord Howard's livery dressed,
The lion argent decked his breast;
led a boy of blooming hue—
right to meet a mother's view!
was the heir of great Buccleuch.
reisance meet the herald made,
and thus his master's will be said:

XXIV.

'thirks, high dame, my noble lords,
against Ladye fair to draw their swords;
but yet they may not tamely see,
through the western wardenry,
our law-contramning kinsmen ride,
and burn and spoil the Border-side;
and ill beseems your rank and birth make your towers a flemens-firth."
the claim from thee William of Deloraine, that he may suffer march-treason pain:† was but last Saint Cuthbert's even be pricked to Stapleton on Leven, harried; the lands of Richard Musgrave,
and slew his brother by dint of glaive.
men, since a lone and widowed dame
these restless riders may not tame, other receive within thy towers
two hundred of my master's powers, straight they sound their warrison;§
and storm and spoil thy garrison;

* An asylum for outlaws.
† Border treason.
‡ Plundered.
§ Note of assault.
And this fair boy, to London led,
Shall good King Edward's page be bred."

XXV.
He ceased;—and loud the boy did cry,—
And stretched his little arms on high;
Implored for aid each well-known face,
And strove to seek the dame's embrace.
A moment changed that Ladye's cheer,
Gushed to her eye the unbidden tear;
She gazed upon the leaders round,
And dark and sad each warrior frowned:
Then, deep within her sobbing breast
She locked the struggling sigh to rest;
Unaltered and collected stood,
And thus replied, in dauntless mood:—

XXVI.
"Say to your lords of high emprise,
Who war on women and on boys,
That either William of Deloraine
Will cleanse him, by oath, of march-treason stain
Or else he will the combat take
'Gainst Musgrave, for his honour's sake.
No knight in Cumberland so good,
But William may count with him kin and blood.
Knighthood he took of Douglas' sword,
When English blood swelled Ancram ford;
THE LAST MINSTREL.

that Lord Dacre's steed was wight,
him ably in the flight,
and seen him dubbed a knight.
Kung heir of Branksome's line,
maid, and God be mine;
one no friend shall meet his doom;
le I live, no foe finds room.
thy lords their purpose urge,
our defiance loud and high;
an is their lyke-wake* dirge, coat, the grave where they shall lie."

XXVII.
looked round, applause to claim—
ened Thirlestane's eye of flame;
e Wat of Harden blew:
1 pennons wide were flung,
the Border slogan rung,
Mary for the young Buccleuch!"
sh war-cry answered wide,
ward bent each southern spear;
ial archer made a stride,
w the bow-string to his ear;
trel's war-note loud was blown:—
gray-goose shaft had flown, man galloped from the rear.

kr, the watching a corpse previous to interment.
XXVIII.

"Ah! noble lords!" he, breathless, said,
"What treason has your march betrayed?
What make you here, from aid so far,
Before you walls, around you war?
Your foemen triumph in the thought,
That in the toils the lion's caught.
Already on dark Ruberslaw
The Douglas holds his weapon-schaw;*
The lances, waving in his train,
Clothe the dun heath like autumn grain;
And on the Liddle's northern strand,
To bar retreat to Cumberland,
Lord Maxwell ranks his merry-men good,
Beneath the eagle and the rood;
   And Jedwood, Eske, and Teviotdale,
   Have to proud Angus come;
   And all the Merse and Lauderdale
   Have risen with haughty Home.
An exile from Northumberland,
   In Liddlesdale I've wandered long;
But still my heart was with merry England
   And cannot brook my country's wrong;
And hard I've spurred all night to show
The mustering of the coming foe."

XXIX.

"And let them come!" fierce Dacre cried;
"For soon you crest, my father's pride,

* Weapon-schaw, the military array of a count
Canto IV. THE LAST MINSTREL.

That swept the shores of Judah's sea,
And waved in gales of Galilee,
From Branksome's highest towers displayed,
Shall mock the rescue's lingering aid! —
Level each harquebus on row;
Draw, merry archers, draw the bow;
Up, bill men, to the walls, and cry,
Dacre for England, win or die!" —

XXX.

"Yet hear," quoth Howard, "calmly hear,
Nor deem my words the words of fear:
For who, in field or foray slack,
Saw the blanche lion e'er fall back?
But thus to risk our Border flower
In strife against a kingdom's power,
Ten thousand Scots 'gainst thousands three,
Certes, were desperate policy.
Nay, take the terms the Ladye made,
Ere conscious of the advancing aid:
Let Musgrave meet fierce Deloraine
In single fight, and if he gain,
He gains for us; but if he's crossed,
'Tis but a single warrior lost:
The rest, retreating as they came,
Avoid defeat, and death, and shame."

XXXI.

Ill could the haughty Dacre brook
His brother-warden's sage rebuke:
And yet his forward step he stayed,
And slow and sullenly obeyed.
But ne'er again the Border-side
Did these two lords in friendship ride:
And this slight discontent, men say,
Cost blood upon another day.

XXXII.
The pursuivant-at-arms again
Before the castle took his stand;
His trumpet called with parleying strain,
The leaders of the Scottish band;
And he defied, in Musgrave's right,
Stout Deloraine to single fight;
A gauntlet at their feet he laid,
And thus the terms of fight he said:—
"If in the lists good Musgrave's sword
Vanquish the knight of Deloraine,
Your youthful chieftain, Branksome's lord,
Shall hostage for his clan remain:
If Deloraine foil good Musgrave,
The boy his liberty shall have.
Howe'er it falls, the English band,
Unharming Scots, by Scots unharmed,
In peaceful march, like men unarmed,
Shall straight retreat to Cumberland."

XXXIII.
Unconscious of the near relief,
The proffer pleased each Scottish chief,
into IV.  THE LAST MINSTREL.

Though much the Ladye sage gainsayed;
or though their hearts were brave and true,
on Jedwood's recent sack they knew,
How tardy was the regent's aid:

id you may guess the noble dame
Durst not the secret prescience own,
run from the art she might not name,
By which the coming help was known;
osed was the compact, and agreed at lists should be enclosed with speed,
Beneath the castle, on a lawn:
hey fixed the morrow for the strife,
foot, with Scottish ax and knife,
At the fourth hour from peep of dawn;
hen Deloraine, from sickness freed,
else a champion in his stead,
hould for himself and chieftain stand,
inst stout Musgrave, hand to hand.

XXXIV.

right well, that, in their lay,
any minstrels sing and say,
combat should be made on horse,
ing steed, in full career,
and to aid, when as the spear
ld shiver in the course:
the jovial Harper, taught a youth, how it was fought,
THE LAY OF

In guise which now I say; He knew each ordinance and clause
Of black Lord Archibald's battle laws, In the old Douglas' day.
He brooked not, he, that scoffing tongue Should tax his minstrelsy with wrong, Or call his song untrue;
For this, when they the goblet plied, And such rude taunt had chasfed his pride, The bard of Reull he slew.
On Teviot's side, in fight they stood, And tuneful hands were stained with blood Where still the thorn's white branches wave Memorial o'er his rival's grave.

XXXV.

Why should I tell the rigid doom, That dragged my master to his tomb;
How Ousenam's maidens tore their hair Wept till their eyes were dead and dim, And wrung their hands for love of him, Who died at Jedwood Air? He died!—His scholars, one by one, To the cold silent grave are gone; And I, alas! survive alone, To muse o'er rivalries of yore, And grieve that I shall hear no more The strains, which envy heard before;
THE LAST MIN

my minstrel brethren our song is dead.

An paused: the listening dames
Applaud the hoary Minstrel's song
With many a word of kindly clange
In pity half and half sincere,— Marvelled the duchess how so
His legendary song could tell,
Of ancient deeds, so long forgo
Of feuds, whose memory was
Of forests, now laid waste and
Of towers, which harbour now
Of manners, long since change
Of chiefs, who under their gray
So long had slept, that fickle F
Had blotted from her rolls thei
And twined round some new n
The fading wreath for which t
In sooth, 'twas strange, this old
Could call them from their ma
Their drooping fancy wakes at praise,
And strives to trim the short-lived blaze.

Smiled then, well-pleased, the Aged Man,
And thus his tale continued ran.
THE LAY

OF THE

LAST MINSTREL.

CANTO FIFTH.
THE LAY

OF

THE LAST MINSTREL.

CANTO FIFTH.

I.

Call it not vain:—they do not err,
Who say, that, when the Poet dies,
Mute Nature mourns her worshipper,
And celebrates his obsequies;
Who say, tall cliff, and cavern lone,
For the departed bard make moan;
That mountains weep in crystal rill;
That flowers in tears of balm distil;
Through his loved groves that breezes sigh,
And oaks, in deeper groan, reply;
And rivers teach their rushing wave
To murmur dirges round his grave.

II.

Not that, in sooth, o'er mortal urn
Those things inanimate can mourn;
But that the stream, the wood, the gale,
Is vocal with the plaintive wail
Of those, who, else forgotten long,
Lived in the poet’s faithful song,
And, with the poet’s parting breath,
Whose memory feels a second death.
The maid’s pale shade, who wails her lot,
That love, true love, should be forgot,
From rose and hawthorn shakes the tear
Upon the gentle minstrel’s bier.
The phantom knight, his glory fled,
Mourns o’er the field he heaped with dead;
Mounts the wild blast that sweeps amain,
And shrieks along the battle-plain:
The chief, whose antique crownlet long
Still sparkled in the feudal song,
Now, from the mountain’s misty throne,
Sees, in the thanedom once his own,
His ashes undistinguished lie,
His place, his power, his memory die:
His groans the lonely caverns fill,
His tears of rage impel the rill;
All mourn the minstrel’s harp unstrung,
Their name unknown, their praise unsung.

III.
Scarcely the hot assault was staid,
The terms of truce were scarcely made,
When they could spy, from Branksome’s town,
The advancing march of martial powers;
Chapter V. THE LAST MINSTREL.

Thick clouds of dust afar appeared,
And trampling steeds were faintly heard;
Bright spears, above the columns daw,
Glanced momentary to the sun;
And feudal banners fair displayed
The bands that moved to Branksome's aid.

IV.

Vails not to tell each hardy clan,
From the fair Middle Marches came;
The Bloody Heart blazed in the van,
Announcing Douglas' dreaded name!
Vails not to tell what steeds did spurn,
Where the Seven Spears of Wedderburne
Their men in battle-order set;
And Swinton laid the lance in rest,
That tamed of yore the sparkling crest
Of Clarence's Plantagenet.
Nor list I say what hundreds more,
From the rich Merse and Lammermore,
And Tweed's fair borders, to the war,
Beneath the crest of Old Dunbar,
And Hepburn's mingled banners come,
Down the steep mountain glittering far,
And shouting still, "a Home! a Home!"

V.

Now squire and knight, from Branksome sent,
On many a courteous message went;
100  THE LAY OF  Canto

To every chief and lord they paid
Meet thanks for prompt and powerful aid;
And told them,—how a truce was made,
And how a day of fight was ta’en
'Twixt Musgrave and stout Deloraine;
And how the Ladye prayed them dear,
That all would stay the fight to see,
And deign in love and courtesy,
To taste of Branksome cheer.

Nor, while they bade to feast each Scot,
Were England's noble Lords forgot;
Himself, the hoary Seneschal,
Rode forth, in seemly terms to call
Those gallant foes to Branksome Hall.
Accepted Howard, than whom knight
Was never dubbed, more bold in fight;
Nor, when from war and armour free,
More famed for stately courtesy:
But angry Dacre rather chose
In his pavilion to repose.

VI.

Now, noble Dame, perchance you ask,
How these two hostile armies met?
Deeming it were no easy task
To keep the truce which here was set;
Where martial spirits, all on fire,
Breathed only blood and mortal ire.—
By mutual inroads, mutual blows,
By habit, and by nation, foes,
Canto V.  THE LAST MINSTREL.

They met on Teviot's strand:
They met, and sate them mingled down,
Without a threat, without a frown,
As brothers meet in foreign land:
The hands, the spear that lately grasped,
Still in the mailed gauntlet clasped,
Were interchanged in greeting dear;
Visors were raised, and faces shown,
And many a friend to friend made known,
Partook of social cheer.
Some drove the jolly bowl about;
With dice and draughts some chased the day;
And some, with many a merry shout,
In riot, revelry, and rout,
Pursued the foot-ball play.

VII.

Yet, be it known, had bugles blown,
Or sign of war been seen,
Those bands, so fair together ranged,
Those hands, so frankly interchanged,
Had died with gore the green:
The merry shout by Teviotside
Had sunk in war-cries wild and wide,
And in the groan of death;
And whingers,* now in friendship bare,
The social meal to part and share,
Had found a bloody sheath.

* A sort of knife, or poniard.
"Twixt truce and war, such sudden change
Was not unfrequent, nor held strange,
In the old Border-day;
But yet on Branksome's towers and town,
In peaceful merriment, sunk down
The sun's declining ray.

VIII.
The blithsome signs of wassal gay
Decayed not with the dying day;
Soon through the latticed windows tall
Of lofty Branksome's lordly hall,
Divided square by shafts of stone,
Huge flakes of ruddy lustre shone;
Nor less the gilded rafters rang
With merry harp and beakers' clang:
And frequent, on the darkening plain,
Loud hollo, whoop, or whistle ran,
As bands, their stragglers to regain,
Give the shrill watchword of their clan;
And revellers, o'er their bowls, proclaim
Douglas or Dacre's conquering name.

IX.
Less frequent heard, and fainter still,
At length, the various clamours died;
And you might hear, from Branksome hill,
No sound but Teviot's rushing tide;
Save, when the changing sentinel
The challenge of his watch could tell;
Canto V. THE LAST MINSTREL.

And save, where, through the dark profound,
The clanging ax and hammer's sound
   Rung from the nether lawn;
For many a busy hand toiled there,
Strong pales to shape, and beams to square,
The lists' dread barriers to prepare
   Against the morrow's dawn.

X.
Margaret from hall did soon retreat,
   Despite the Dame's reproving eye;
Nor marked she, as she left her seat,
   Full many a stifled sigh:
For many a noble warrior strove
To win the flower of Teviot's love
   And many a bold ally.—
With throbbing head and anxious heart,
All in her lonely bower apart,
   In broken sleep she lay:
By times, from silken couch she rose;
While yet the bannered hosts repose,
   She viewed the dawning day:
Of all the hundreds sunk to rest,
First woke the loveliest and the best.

XI.
She gazed upon the inner court,
   Which in the tower's tall shadow lay;
Where coursers' clang, and stamp, and snort,
   Had rung the live-long yesterday;
Now still as death; till, stalking slow,—
The jingling spurs announced his tread,—
A stately warrior passed below;
But when he raised his plumèd head—
Blessèd Mary! can it be?—
Secure, as if in Ousenam bowers,
He walks through Branksome's hostile towne
With fearless step and free.
She dared not sign, she dared not speak—
Oh! if one page's slumbers break,
His blood the price must pay!
Not all the pearls Queen Mary wears,
Not Margaret's yet more precious tears;
Shall buy his life a day.

XII.
Yet was his hazard small; for well
You may bethink you of the spell
Of that sly urchin Page;
This to his lord he did impart,
And made him seem, by glamour art,
A knight from Hermitage.
Unchallenged, thus, the warder's post.
The court, unchallenged, thus he crossed,
For all the vassalage:
But, O! what magic's quaint disguise
Could blind fair Margaret's sure eye!
Canto V.  THE LAST MINSTREL.

She started from her seat;
While with surprise and fear she strove,
And both could scarcely master love—
Lord Henry's at her feet.

XIII.

Oft have I mused, what purpose bad
That foul malicious urchin had
To bring this meeting round;
For happy love's a heavenly sight,
And by a vile malignant sprite
In such no joy is found;
And oft I've deemed, perchance he thought
Their erring passion might have wrought
Sorrow, and sin, and shame;
And death to Cranstoun's gallant Knight,
And to the gentle Lady's bright,
Disgrace, and loss of fame.
But earthly spirit could not tell
The heart of them that loved so well.
True love's the gift which God has given
To man alone beneath the heaven.
It is not fantasy's hot fire,
Whose wishes, soon as granted, fly;
It liveth not in fierce desire,
With dead desire it doth not die;
It is the secret sympathy,
The silver link, the silken tie,
Which heart to heart, and mind to mind,
In body and in soul can bind.—
Now leave we Margaret and her Knight,
To tell you of the approaching fight.

XIV.
Their warning blast the bugles blew,
The pipe's shrill port* aroused each clan;
In haste, the deadly strife to view,
The trooping warriors eager ran:
Thick round the lists their lances stood,
Like blasted pines in Ettrick wood;
To Branksome many a look they threw,
The combatants' approach to view,
And banded many a word of boast,
About the knight each favoured most.

XV.
Meanwhile full anxious was the Dame;
For now arose disputed claim,
Of who should fight for Deloraine,
'Twixt Harden and 'twixt Thirlestaine:
They 'gan to reckon kin and rent,
And frowning brow on brow was bent;
But yet not long the strife—for, lo!
Himself, the Knight of Deloraine,
Strong, as it seemed, and free from pain,
In armour sheathed from top to toe,
Appeared, and craved the combat due

* A martial piece of music, adapted to the bag ame her charm successful knew,"
so fierce chiefs their claims withdrew.

XVI.

for the lists they sought the plain,
ately Ladye’s silken rein oble Howard hold;
ed by her side he walked,
uch, in courteous phrase, they talked ats of arms of old.
his garb—his Flemish ruff
er his doublet, shaped of buff, satin slashed, and lined;
his boot, and gold his spur,
ak was all of Poland fur,
hose with silver twined;
boa blade, by Marchmen felt,
in a broad and studded belt;
, in rude phrase, the Borderers still oble Howard, Belted Will.

XVII.

Lord Howard and the Dame, largaret on her palfrey came,
ext-foot-cloth swept the ground;
was her wimple, and her veil,
er loose locks a chaplet pale hitest roses bound;

* See p. 60. Stanza XXIII.
The lordly Angus, by her side,
In courtesy to cheer her tried;
Without his aid, her hand in vain
Had strove to guide her broidered rein.
He deemed she shuddered at the sight
Of warriors met for mortal fight;
But cause of terror, all unguessed,
Was fluttering in her gentle breast,
When, in their chairs of crimson placed,
The Dame and she the barriers graced.

XVIII.
Prize of the field, the young Buccleuch,
An English knight led forth to view;
Scarce rued the boy his present plight,
So much he longed to see the fight.
Within the lists, in knightly pride,
High Home and haughty Dacre ride;
Their leading staffs of steel they wield,
As marshals of the mortal field;
While to each knight their care assigned
Like vantage of the sun and wind.
Then heralds hoarse did loud proclaim,
In King and Queen, and warden's name,
That none, while lasts the strife,
Should dare, by look, or sign, or word,
Aid to a champion to afford,
On peril of his life;
And not a breath the silence broke,
Till thus the alternate Heralds spoke:—
Canto V. THE LAST MINSTREL. 109

XIX.
ENGLISH HERALD.
Here standeth Richard of Musgrave,
Good knight and true, and freely born,
Amends from Deloraine to crave,
For foul despiteous scathe and scorn.
He sayeth, that William of Deloraine
Is traitor false by Border laws;
This with his sword he will maintain,
So help him God, and his good cause!

XX.
SCOTTISH HERALD.
Here standeth William of Deloraine,
Good knight and true, of noble strain,
Who sayeth that foul treason’s stain,
Since he bore arms, ne’er soiled his coat;
Amd that, so help him God above!
He will on Musgrave’s body prove,
He lies most foullly in his throat.
LORD Dacre.
Forward, brave champions, to the fight!
Sound trumpets——
LORD HOME.
——“God defend the right!”

Then, Teviot! how thine echoes rang,
When bugle-sound and trumpet clang
Let loose the martial foes,
And in mid list, with shield poised high,
And measured step and wary eye,
The combatants did close.

XXI.
Ill would it suit your gentle ear,
Ye lovely listeners, to hear
How to the ax the helms did sound,
And blood poured down from many a wound
For desperate was the strife and long,
And either warrior fierce and strong.
But, were each dame a listening knight,
I well could tell how warriors fight;
For I have seen war's lightning flashing,
Seen the claymore with bayonet clashing,
Seen through red blood the war-horse dashin
And scorned, amid the reeling strife,
To yield a step for death or life.

XXII.
'Tis done, 'tis done! that fatal blow
Has stretched him on the bloody plain;
He strives to rise—Brave Musgrave, no!
Thence never shalt thou rise again!
He chokes in blood—some friendly hand
Undo the visor's barred band,
Unfix the gorget's iron clasp,
And give him room for life to gasp!
V.

Canto V. THE LAST MINSTREL.

0, bootless aid!—Haste, holy Friar,
Haste, ere the sinner shall expire!
Of all his guilt let him be schriven,
And smooth his path from earth to heaven!

XXIII.

In haste the holy Friar sped;—
His naked foot was dived with red,
As through the lists he ran;
Unmindful of the shouts on high,
That hailed the conqueror's victory,
He raised the dying man;
Loose waved his silver beard and hair,
As o'er him he knelled down in prayer;
And still the crucifix on high
He holds before his darkening eye;
And still he bends an anxious ear,
His faltering penitence to hear;
Still props him from the bloody sod;
Still, even when soul and body part,
Pours ghostly comfort on his heart,
And bids him trust in God!
Unheard he prays;—the death-pang's o'er,
Richard of Musgrave breathes no more.

XXIV.

As if exhausted in the fight,
Or musing o'er the piteous sight;
The silent victor stands;
His beaver did he not unclasp,
Marked not the shouts, felt not the grasp
Of gratulating hands.
When lo! strange cries of wild surprise,
Mingled with seeming terror, rise
Among the Scottish bands;
And all, amid the throng'd array,
In panic haste gave open way
To a half-naked ghastly man,
Who downward from the castle ran:
He crossed the barriers at a bound,
And wild and haggard looked around,
As dizzy, and in pain;
And all, upon the armed ground,
Knew William of Deloraine!
Each Ladye sprung from seat with speed;
Vaulted each marshal from his steed;
"And who art thou," they cried,
"Who hast this battle fought and won?"
His plumed helm was soon undone—
"Cranstoun of Teviot-side!
For this fair prize I've fought and won,"—
And to the Ladye led her son.

XXV.
Full oft the rescued boy she kissed,
And often she pressed him to her breast;
For, under all her dauntless show,
Her heart had throbbed at every blow;
Canto V.  THE LAST MINSTREL.

Yet not Lord Cranstoun deigned she greet,
Though low he kneeled at her feet.
Melis not tell what words were made,
What Douglas, Home, and Howard said—
—For Howard was a generous foe—
And how the clan united prayed,
The Ladye would the feud forego,
And deign to bless the nuptial hour
Of Cranstoun's lord and Teviot's Flower.

XXVI.
She looked to river, looked to hill,
Thought on the Spirit's prophesy,
Then broke her silence stern and still,—
"Not you, but Fate, has vanquished me;
Their influence kindly stars may shower
On Teviot's tide and Branksome's tower,
For pride is quelled, and love is free."
She took fair Margaret by the hand,
Who, breathless, trembling, scarce might stand;
That hand to Cranstoun's lord gave she:—
"As I am true to thee and thine,
Do thou be true to me and mine!
This clasp of love our bond shall be;
For this is your betrothing day,
And all these noble lords shall stay,
To grace it with their company."

104
XXVII.

All as they left the listed plain,
Much of the story she did gain;
How Cranstoun fought with Deloraine,
And of the Page, and of the Book
Which from the wounded knight he took;
And how he sought her castle high,
That morn, by help of gramarye;
How, in Sir William's armour dight,
Stolen by his Page, while slept the knight,
He took on him the single fight.
But half his tale he left unsaid,
And lingered till he joined the maid.—
Cared not the Ladye to betray
Her mystic arts in view of day;
But well she thought, ere midnight came,
Of that strange Page the pride to tame,
From his foul hands the Book to save,
And send it back to Michael's grave.—
Needs not to tell each tender word
'Twixt Margaret and Cranstoun's lord;
Nor how she told of former woes,
And how her bosom fell and rose,
While he and Musgrave bandied blows.—
Needs not these lovers' joys to tell;
One day, fair maids, you'll know them well.

XXVIII.

William of Deloraine, some chance
Had wakened from his deathlike trance;
And taught that, in the listed plain,

Had wakened from his deathlike trance;
And taught that, in the listed plain,
Canto V. THE LAST MINSTREL.

Another, in his arms and shield,
Against fierce Musgrave ax did wield,
Under the name of Deloraine.
Hence, to the field, unarmed he ran,
And hence his presence scared the clan,
Who held him for some fleeting wraith,*
And not a man of blood and breath.
Not much this new ally he loved,
Yet, when he saw what hap had proved,
He greeted him right heartilie:
He would not waken old debate
For he was void of rancorous hate
Though rude, and scant of courtesy.
In raids he spilt but seldom blood,
Unless when men at arms withstood,
Or, as was meet, for deadly feud.
He ne'er bore grudge for stalwart blow,
Ta'en in fair fight with gallant foe:
And so 'twas seen of him, e'en now,
When on dead Musgrave he looked down;
Grief darkened on his rugged brow,
Though half disguised with a frown;
And thus, while sorrow bent his head,
His foeman's epitaph he made.

* The spectral apparition of a living person.
XXIX.

"Now, Richard Musgrave, liest thou here!
I ween, my deadly enemy;
For, if I slew thy brother dear,
Thou slewst a sister's son to me;
And when I lay in dungeon dark,
Of Naworth Castle, long months three,
Till ransomed for a thousand mark,
Dark Musgrave, it was long of thee.
And, Musgrave, could our fight be tried,
And thou wert now alive, as I,
No mortal man should us divide,
Till one, or both of us, did die:
Yet rest thee God! for well I know
I ne'er shall find a nobler foe.
In all the northern counties here,
Whose word is Snafe, spur, and spear, "Thou wert the best to follow gear.
'Twas pleasure, as we looked behind,
To see how thou the chase couldst wind,
Cheer the dark blood-hound on his way,
And with the bugle rouse the fray!
I'd give the lands of Deloraine,
Dark Musgrave were alive again."—

* The lands that over Ouse to Berwick forth do be
Have for their blazon had, the Snafe, spur, and spear,
THE LAST MINSTREL.

XXX.

Burned he, till Lord Dacre's band
Bowing back to Cumberland.

Roused brave Musgrave from the field,

And him on his bloody shield;

Scurled lances, four and four,

Thems, the noble burden bore.

At times, upon the gale,

Eard the Minstrels' plaintive wail;

D, four priests, in sable stole,

Requiem for the warrior's soul:

D, the horsemen slowly rode;

Railing pikes the spearmen trod;

Nus the gallant knight they bore,

Gh Liddlesdale, to Levan's shore;

E to Holme Coltrane's lofty nave,

And him in his father's grave.

Warp's wild notes, though hushed the song,

Imic march of death prolong;

Seems it far, and now a-near,

Nests, and now eludes the ear;

Seems some mountain side to sweep,

Taintly dies in valley deep;

Now as if the Minstrels wail,

The sad requiem loads the gale;

O'er the warrior's closing grave,

The full choir in choral stave.
After due pause, they bade him tell,
Why he, who touched the harp so well,
Should thus, with ill-rewarded toil,
Wander a poor and thankless soil,
When the more generous southern land
Would well requite his skilful hand.

The Aged Harper, howsoe'er
His only friend, his harp, was dear,
 Liked not to hear it ranked so high
 Above his flowing poesy;
 Less liked he still, that scornful jeer
 Misprized the land he loved so dear;
 High was the sound, as thus again
 The Bard resumed his minstrel strain.
THE LAY

OF THE

LAST MINSTREL.

CANTO SIXTH.
THE LAY

OF

THE LAST MINSTREL.

CANTO SIXTH.

I.

Breathes there the man, with soul so dead,
Who never to himself hath said,
    This is my own, my native land!
Whose heart hath ne'er within him burned,
As home his footsteps he hath turned,
    From wandering on a foreign strand!
If such there breathe, go, mark him well;
For him no Minstrel raptures swell;
High though his titles, proud his name,
Boundless his wealth as wish can claim;
Despite those titles, power, and pelf,
The wretch, concentred all in self,
Living, shall forfeit fair renown,
And, doubly dying, shall go down
To the vile dust, from whence he sprung,
Unwept, unhonoured, and unsung.
II.

O Caledonia! stern and wild,
Meet nurse for a poetic child!
Land of brown heath and shaggy wood,
Land of the mountain and the flood,
Land of my sires! what mortal hand
Can e'er untie the filial band,
That knits me to thy rugged strand!
Still, as I view each well-known scene,
Think what is now, and what hath been,
Seems as, to me, of all bereft,
Sole friends thy woods and streams were!
And thus I love them better still,
Even in extremity of ill.
By Yarrow's stream still let me stray,
Though none should guide my feeble way:
Still feel the breeze down Ettricke break,
Although it chill my withered cheek;
Still lay my head by Teviot's stone,
Though there, forgotten and alone,
The Bard may draw his parting groan.

III.

Not scorned like me! to Branksome Hall
The minstrels came, at festive call;
Trooping they came, from near and far,
The jovial priest of mirth and war;
Alike for feast and fight prepared,
Battle and Banquet both they shared.
Canto VI. THE LAST MINSTREL.

Of late, before each martial clan,
They blew their death-note in the van,
But now, for every merry mate,
Rose the portcullis' iron grate;
They sound the pipe, they strike the string;
They dance, they revel, and they sing,
Till the rude turrets shake and ring.

IV.

Me lists not at this tide declare
The splendour of the spousal rite,
How apparelled in the chapel fair
Both maid and matron, squire and knight;
Me lists not tell of owches rare,
Of mantles green, and braided hair,
And kirtles furred with miniver;
What plumage waved the altar round,
How spurs, and ringing chainlets, sound:
And hard it were for bard to speak
The changeful hue of Margaret's cheek;
That lovely hue which comes and flies,
As awe and shame alternate rise.

V.

Some bards have sung the Ladye high
Chapel or altar came not nigh;
Nor durst the rites of spousal grace,
So much she feared each holy place.
False slanders these:—I trust right well,
She wrought not by forbidden spell;

She wrought not by forbidden spell;
For mighty words and signs have power
O'er sprites in planetary hour:
Yet scarce I praise their venturous part,
Who tamper with such dangerous art.

But this for faithful truth I say,
The Ladye by the altar stood,
Of sable velvet her array,
And on her head a crimson hood,
With pearls embroidered and entwined,
Guarded with gold, with ermine lined;
A merlin sat upon her wrist,
Held by a leash of silken twist.

VI.

The spousal rites were ended soon:
'Twas now the merry hour of noon,
And in the lofty arched hall
Was spread the gorgeous festival.
Steward and squire, with heedful haste,
Marshalled the rank of every guest;
Pages, with ready blade, were there,
The mighty meal to carve and share:
O'er capon, heron-shew, and crane,
And princely peacock's gilded train,
And o'er the boar-head, garnished brave,
And cygnet from St. Mary's wave;
O'er ptarmigan and venison,
The priest had spoke his benison.
Then rose the riot and the din,
_Above, beneath, without, within!_
Canto VI. THE LAST MINSTREL.

For, from the lofty balcony,
Rung trumpet, shalm, and psaltery;
Their clanging bowls old warriors quaffed,
Loudly they spoke, and loudly laughed;
Whispered young knights, in tone more mild,
To ladies fair, and ladies smiled.
The hooded hawks, high perched on beam,
The clamour joined with whistling scream,
And flapped their wings, and shook their bells,
In concert with the stag-hounds' yells.
Round go the flasks of ruddy wine,
From Bordeaux, Orleans, or the Rhine;
Their tasks the busy sewers ply,
And all is mirth and revelry.

VII.
The Goblin Page, omitting still
No opportunity of ill,
Strove now, while blood ran hot and high,
To rouse debate and jealousy;
Till Conrad, Lord of Wolfenstein,
By nature fierce, and warm with wine,
And now in humour highly crossed,
About some steeds his band had lost,
High words to words succeeding still,
Smote, with his gauntlet, stout Hunthill;
A hot and hardy Rutherford,
Whom men call Dickon Draw-the-sword;
He took it on the Page's saye,
Hunthill had driven these steeds away.
Then Howard, Home, and Douglas rose,
The kindling discord to compose:
Stern Rutherford right little said,
But bit his glove, and shook his head.—
A fortnight thence, in Inglewood,
Stout Conrad, cold, and drenched in blood,
His bosom gored with many a wound,
Was by a woodman's lyme-dog found;
Unknown the manner of his death,
Gone was his brand, both sword and sheath;
But ever from that time, 'twas said,
That Dickon wore a Cologne blade.

VIII.
The Dwarf, who feared his master's eye
Might his foul treachery espie,
Now sought the castle buttery,
Where many a yeoman, bold and free,
Revelled as merrily and well
As those that sat in lordly selle.
Wat Tinlimn, there, did frankly raise
The pledge to Arthur Fire-the-braes;
And he, as by his breeding bound,
To Howard's merry men sent it round.
To quit them, on the English side,
Red Roland Forster loudly cried,
"A deep carouse to yon fair bride!"
At every pledge, from vat and pail,
Roamed forth, in floods, the nut-brown ale:
Canto VI. THE LAST MINSTREL. 127

While shout the riders every one.
Such day of mirth ne'er cheered their clan,
Since old Buccleuch the name did gain,
When in the cleuch the buck was ta'en.

IX.
The wily Page, with vengeful thought,
Remembered him of Tinlinn's yew,
And swore, it should be dearly bought,
That ever he the arrow drew.
First, he the yeoman did molest,
With bitter gibe, and taunting jest;
Told, how he fled at Solway strife,
And how Hob Armstrong cheered his wife:
Then, shunning still his powerful arm,
At unawares he wrought him harm;
From trencher stole his choicest cheer,
Dashed from his lips his can of beer;
Then, to his knee sly creeping on,
With bodkin pierced him to the bone:
The venomed wound, and festering joint,
Long after rued that bodkin's point.
The startled yeoman swore and spurned,
And board and flaggons overturned.
Riot and clamour wild began;
Back to the hall the Urchin ran;
Took in a darkling nook his post,
And grinned, and muttered, "Lost! lost! lost!"
X.
By this, the Dame, lest further fray
Should mar the concord of the day,
Had bid the Minstrels tune their lay.
And first stept forth old Albert Græme,
The Minstrel of that ancient name:
Was none who struck the harp so well,
Within the Land Debatable;
Well friended too, his hardy kin,
Whoever lost, were sure to win;
They sought the beoves, that made their broth,
In Scotland and in England both.
In homely guise, as nature bade,
His simple song the Borderer said.

XI.
ALBERT GRÆME.
It was an English ladye bright,
(The sun shines fair on Carlisle wall,)
And she would marry a Scottish knight,
For Love will still be lord of all.

Blythly they saw the rising sun,
When he shone fair on Carlisle wall,
But they were sad ere day was done,
Though Love was still the lord of all.
Her sire gave brooch and jewel fine,
    Where the sun shines fair on Carlisle wall;
Her brother gave but a flask of wine,
    For ere that Love was lord of all.

For she had lands, both meadow and lea,
    Where the sun shines fair on Carlisle wall,
And he swore her death, ere he would see
    A Scottish knight the lord of all!

XII.

That wine she had not tasted well,
    (The sun shines fair on Carlisle wall;)
When dead, in her true love's arms, she fell,
    For Love was still the lord of all.

He pierced her brother to the heart,
    Where the sun shines fair on Carlisle wall;
So perish all, would true love part,
    That Love may still be lord of all.

And then he took the cross divine,
    Where the sun shines fair on Carlisle wall,
And died for her sake in Palestine,
    So Love was still the lord of all.

Now all ye lovers that faithful prove,
    (The sun shines fair on Carlisle wall,) Pray for their souls who died for love,
    For Love shall still be lord of all!
XIII.
As ended Albert's simple lay
   Arose a bard of loftier port;
For sonnet, rhyme, and roundelay,
   Renowned in haughty Henry's court:
There hung thy harp, unrivalled long,
Fitztraver of the silver song!
   The gentle Surrey loved his lyre—
Who has not heard of Surrey's fame?
   His was the hero's soul of fire,
And his, the bard's immortal name,
And his, was love, exalted high
By all the glow of chivalry.

XIV.
They sought, together, climes afar,
   And oft within some olive grove,
When evening came, with twinkling star,
   They sung of Surrey's absent love.
His step the Italian peasant staid,
   And deemed, that spirits from on high,
Round where some hermit saint was laid,
   Were breathing heavenly melody;
So sweet did harp and voice combine,
To praise the name of Geraldine.

XV.
Fitztraver! O what tongue may say
   The pangs thy faithful bosom knew,
When Surrey, of the deathless lay,
Ungrateful Tudor’s sentence slew?
Regardless of the tyrant’s frown,
His harp called wrath and vengeance down.
He left, for Naworth’s iron towers,
Windsor’s green glades, and courtly bowers,
And, faithful to his patron’s name,
With Howard still Fitztraver came;
Lord William’s foremost favourite he,
And chief of all his minstrelsy.

XVI.
FITZTRAVER.
’Twas All-soul’s eve, and Surrey’s heart beat high;
He heard the midnight bell with anxious start,
Which told the mystic hour approaching nigh,
When wise Cornelius promised, by his art,
To show to him the ladye of his heart,
Albeit betwixt them roared the ocean grim;
Yet so the sage had hight to play his part,
That he should see her form in life and limb,
And mark, if still she loved, and still she thought of him.

XVII.
Dark was the vaulted room of gramarye,
To which the wizard led the gallant Knight,
Save that before a mirror, huge and high,
A hallowed taper shed a glimmering light.
On mystic implements of magic might;
    On cross, and character, and talisman,
And almagest, and altar,—nothing bright;
    For fitful was the lustre, pale and wan,
As watch-light by the bed of some departing man.

XVIII.
But soon, within that mirror huge and high,
    Was seen a self-emitted light to gleam;
And forms upon its breast the earl 'gan spy,
    Cloudy and indistinct as feverish dream;
Till, slow arranging, and defined, they seem
    To form a lordly and a lofty room,
Part lighted by a lamp with silver beam,
    Placed by a couch of Agra's silken loom,
And part by moonshine pale, and part was hid in gloom.

XIX.
Fair all the pageant—but how passing fair,
    The slender form, which lay on couch of Ind!
O'er her white bosom strayed her hazel hair,
    Pale her dear cheek as if for love she pined;
All in her night-robe loose she lay reclined,
    And, pensive, read from tablet eburnine
Some strain that seemed her inmost soul to find:—
    That favoured strain was Surrey's raptured line,
That fair and lovely form, the Ladye Geraldine.
Canto VI.  THE LAST MINSTREL.  133

XX.
Slow rolled the clouds upon the lovely form,
And swept the goodly vision all away—
So royal envy rolled the murky storm
O'er my beloved Master's glorious day.
Thou jealous, ruthless tyrant! Heaven repay
On thee, and on thy children's latest line,
The wild caprice of thy despotic sway,
The gory bridal bed, the plundered shrine,
The murdered Surrey's blood, the tears of Geraldine!

XXI.
Both Scots, and Southern chiefs, prolong Applauses of Fitzraver's song:
These hated Henry's name as death,
And those still held the ancient faith.—
Then, from his seat, with lofty air,
Rose Harold, bard of brave St. Clair;
St. Clair, who, feasting high at Home,
Had with that lord to battle come.
Harold was born where restless seas
Howl round the storm-swept Orcades;
Where erst St. Clairs held princely sway
O'er isle and islet, strait and bay;—
Still nods their palace to its fall,
Thy pride and sorrow, fair Kirkwall!
Thence oft he marked fierce Pentland rave,
As if grim Odin rode her wave;
And watched, the whilst, with visage pale,
And throbbing heart, the struggling sail;
For all of wonderful and wild
Had rapture for the lonely child.

XXII.
And much of wild and wonderful
In these rude isles might Fancy cull;
For thither came, in times afar,
Stern Lochlin's sons of roving war,
The Norsemen, trained to spoil and blood,
Skilled to prepare the raven's food;
Kings of the main their leaders brave,
Their barks the dragons of the wave.
And there, in many a stormy vale,
The Scald had told his wonderous tale;
And many a Runic column high
Had witnessed grim idolatry.
And thus had Harold, in his youth,
Learned many a Saga's rhyme uncouth,—
Of that Sea-Snake, tremendous curled,
Whose monstrous circle girds the world;
Of those dread Maids, whose hideous yell
Maddens the battle's bloody swell;
Of chiefs, who, guided through the gloom
By the pale death-lights of the tomb,
Ransacked the graves of warriors old,
Their falchions wrench'd from corpses' hold;
Waked the deaf tomb with war's alarms,
And bade the dead arise to arms!
Canto VI.  THE LAST MINSTREL.

With war and wonder all on flame,
To Roslin'a bowers young Harold came,
Where, by sweet glen and greenwood tree,
He learned a milder minstrelsy;
Yet something of the northern spell
Mixed with the softer numbers well:

XXIII.
HAROLD.

O listen, listen, ladies gay!
No haughty feat of arms I tell:
Soft is the note, and sad the lay,
That mourns the lovely Rosabelle.

"Moor, moor the barge, ye gallant crew!
And, gentle ladye, deign to stay!
Rest thee in castle Ravensheuch,
Nor tempt the stormy frith to-day.

"The blackening wave is edged with white;
To inch* and rock the sea-mews fly;
The fishers have heard the Water Sprite,
Whose screams forbode that wreck is nigh.

"Last night the gifted Seer did view
A wet shroud swathed round ladye gay;
Then stay thee, Fair, in Ravensheuch:
Why cross the gloomy frith to-day?"

* Inch, litra.
"'Tis not because Lord Lindesay's heir
To-night at Roslin leads the ball,
But that my ladye-mother there
Sits lonely in her castle-hall.

"'Tis not because the ring they ride,
And Lindesay at the ring rides well,
But that my sire the wine will chide
If 'tis not filled by Rosabelle."

O'er Roslin all that dreary night
A wonderous blaze was seen to gleam;
'Twas broader than the watch-fire light,
And redder than the bright moon-beam.

It glared on Roslin's castled rock,
It rudded all the copse-wood glen;
'Twas seen from Dreyden's groves of oak,
And seen from caverned Hawthornden.

Seemed all on fire that chapel proud,
Where Roslin's chiefs uncoffined lie;
Each Baron, for a sable shroud,
Sheathed in his iron panoply.

Seemed all on fire within, around,
Deep sacristy and altar's pale;
Shone every pillar foliage-bound,
And glimmered all the dead-men's mail.
Canto VI. THE LAST MINSTREL.

Blazed battlement and pinnet high,
Blazed every rose-carved buttress fair—
So still they blaze, when fate is nigh
The lordly line of high St. Clair.

There are twenty of Roslin's barons bold
Lie buried within that proud chapelle;
Each one the holy vault doth hold—
But the sea holds lovely Rosabelle!

And each St. Clair was buried there,
With candle, with book, and with knell;
But the sea-caves rung, and the wild winds sung,
The dirge of lovely Rosabelle.

XXIV.
So sweet was Harold's piteous lay,
Scarce marked the guests the darkened hall,
Though long before the sinking day,
A wonderous shade involved them all:
It was not eddying mist or fog,
Drained by the sun from fen or bog:
Of no eclipse had sages told;
And yet, as it came on apace,
Each one could scarce his neighbour's face,
Could scarce his own stretched hand behold.
A secret horror checked the feast,
And chilled the soul of every guest;
Even the high Dame stood half aghast,
She knew some evil on the blast;

12th
The elvish page fell to the ground,
And, shuddering, muttered, “Found, found, found!”

XXV.

Then sudden, through the darkened air
A flash of lightning came;
So broad, so bright, so red the glare,
The castle seemed on flame.
Glanced every rafter of the hall,
Glanced every shield upon the wall;
Each trophied beam, each sculptured stone,
Were instant seen, and instant gone;
Full through the guests’ bedazzled band
Resistless flashed the levin-brand,
And filled the hall with smouldering smoke,
As on the elvish page it broke.

It broke, with thunder long and loud,
Dismayed the brave, appalled the proud,—
From sea to sea the larum rung;

On Berwick wall, and at Carlisle withal,
To arms the startled warders sprung.

When ended was the dreadful roar,
The elvish Dwarf was seen no more!

XXVI.

Some heard a voice in Branksome Hall,
Some saw a sight, not seen by all;
That dreadful voice was heard by some,
Cry, with loud summons, “Gylbin, come!”
I. THE LAST MINSTREL.

In the spot where burst the brand,
Where the page had flung him down,
Saw an arm, and some a hand,
Some the waving of a gown.

As in silence prayed and shook,
or dimmed each lofty look,
of all the astonished train
isma made as Deloraine;

And did freeze, his brain did burn,
ARED his mind would ne'er return;
Was speechless, ghastly, wan,
im of whom the story ran,
poke the spectre-bound in Man.*

Geth, by fits, he darkly told, broken hint, and shuddering cold—
he had seen, right certainly,
with amice wrapped around,
ought Spanish baldrick bound,
grim from beyond the sea;
—But how it mattered not—
the wizard Michael Scott.

XXVII.

ous crowd, with horror pale,
ling, heard the wonderous tale;
and was made, no word was spoke,
gle Angus silence broke;
he a solemn sacred plight

* The Isle of Man.—See Note.
Did to St. Bride of Douglas make,
That he a pilgrimage would take,
To Melrose Abbey, for the sake
Of Michael’s restless sprite.
Then each, to ease his troubled breast,
To some blessed saint his prayers addressed;
Some to St. Modan made their vows,
Some to St. Mary of the Lowes,
Some to the Holy Rood of Lisle,
Some to our Ladye of the Isle;
Each did his patron witness make,
That he such pilgrimage would take,
And Monks should sing, and bells should toll,
All for the weal of Michael’s soul.
While vows were ta’en, and prayers were prayed,
’Tis said the noble Dame, dismayed,
Renounced, for aye, dark magic’s aid.

XXVIII.
Nought of the bridal will I tell,
Which after in short space befell;
Now how brave sons and daughters fair
Blessed Teviot’s Flower, and Cranstoun’s heir:
After such dreadful scene, ’twere vain
To wake the note of mirth again.
More meet it were to mark the day
Of penitence and prayer divine,
When pilgrim-chiefs, in sad array,
Sought Melrose’ holy shrine.
Canto VI. THE LAST MINSTREL. 141

XXIX.
With naked foot, and sackcloth vest,
And arms enfolded on his breast,
Did every pilgrim go;
The standers-by might hear unneath,
Footstep, or voice, or high-drawn breath,
Through all the lengthened row:
No lordly look, nor martial stride,
Gone was their glory, sunk their pride,
Forgotten their renown;
Silent and slow, like ghosts, they glide
To the high altar's hallowed side,
And there they knelt down:
Above the suppliant chieftains wave
The banners of departed brave;
Beneath the lettered stones were laid
The ashes of their fathers dead;
From many a garnished niche around,
Stern saints, and tortured martyrs, frowned.

XXX.
And slow up the dim aisle afar,
With sable cowl and scapular,
And snow-white stoles, in order due;
The holy Fathers, two and two,
In long procession came;
Taper, and host, and book they bare,
And holy banner, flourished fair
With the Redeemer's name:
Above the prostrate pilgrim band
The mitred Abbot stretched his hand,
   And bless'd them as they kneeled;
With holy cross he signed them all,
And pray'd they might be sage in hall,
   And fortunate in field.
Then mass was sung, and prayers were said,
And solemn requiem for the dead;
And bells tolled out their mighty peal,
For the departed spirit's weal;
And ever in the office close
The hymn of intercession rose;
And far the echoing aisles prolong
The awful burthen of the song,—

_Dies iræ, dies illæ,
Solvet sæculum in favilla;
While the peeling organ rung;
Were it meet with sacred strain
To close my lay, so light and vain,
Thus the holy fathers sung.

XXXI.
HYMN FOR THE DEAD.
That day of wrath, that dreadful day,
When heaven and earth shall pass away,
What power shall be the sinner's stay?
How shall he meet that dreadful day?

When, shrivelling like a parched scroll,
_The flaming heavens together roll_;
en louder yet, and yet more dread,
ells the high trump that wakes the dead!

! on that day, that wrathful day,
en man to judgment wakes from clay,
Thou the trembling sinner's stay,
ough heaven and earth shall pass away!

shed is the harp—the Minstrel gone.
did he wander forth alone?
e, in indigence and age,
ger out his pilgrimage?
:—close beneath proud Newark's tower,
d the Minstrel's lowly bower;
imple hut; but there was seen little garden hedged with green, eful hearth, and lattice clean.
er sheltered wanderers, by the blaze,
read the tale of other days;
uch he loved to ope his door,
d give the aid he begged before.
assed the winter's day; but still,
en summer smiled on sweet Bowhill,
ly's eve, with balmy breath,
ed the blue-bells on Newark heath;
en throstles sung in Hare-head shaw,
d corn was green on Carterhaugh,
And flourished, broad, Blackandro's oak,
The aged Harper's soul awoke!
Then would he sing achievements high,
And circumstance of chivalry,
Till the wrapt traveller would stay,
Forgetful of the closing day;
And noble youths, the strain to hear,
Forsook the hunting of the deer;
And Yarrow, as he rolled along,
Bore burden to the Minstrel's song.
NOTES.
NOTES TO CANTO FIRST.

Note I.

The feast was over in Branksome tower.—P. 11.

In the reign of James I. Sir William Scott of Buccleuch, chief of the clan bearing that name, exchanged, with Sir Thomas Inglis of Manor, the estate of Murdiestone, in Lanarkshire, for one half of the barony of Branksome, or Branxholm,* lying upon the Teviot, about three miles above Hawick. He was probably induced to this transaction from the vicinity of Branksome to the extensive domain which he possessed in Ettrick Forest and in Teviotdale. In the former district he held by occupancy the estate of Buccleuch,† and much of the forest land on the river Ettrick. In Teviotdale, he enjoyed the barony of Eckford, by a grant from Robert II. to his ancestor, Walter Scott of Kirkurd, for the apprehending of Gilbert Ridderdour, confirmed by Robert III., 3d May, 1424. Tradition imputes the exchange betwixt Scott and Inglis to a conversation, in which the latter, a man, it would appear, of a mild and forbearing nature, complained

* Branxholm is the proper name of the barony; but Branksome has been adopted, as suitable to the pronunciation, and more proper for poetry.

† There are no vestiges of any building at Buccleuch, except the site of a chapel, where, according to a tradition current in the time of Scott of Satchells, many of the ancient barons of Buccleuch lie buried. There is also said to have been a mill near this solitary spot; an extraordinary circumstance, as little or no corn grows within several miles of Buccleuch. Satchell says it was used to grind corn for the bounds of the chief's land.
much of the injuries which he was exposed to from the English Borderers, who frequently plundered his lands of Branksome. Sir William Scott instantly offered him the estate of Muriestone, in exchange for that which was subject to such egregious inconvenience. When the bargain was completed, he drily remarked, that the cattle in Cumberland were as good as those of Teviotdale; and proceeded to commence a system of reprisals upon the English, which was regularly pursued by his successors. In the next reign, James II. granted to Sir Walter Scott of Branksome, and to Sir David, his son, the remaining half of the barony of Branksome, to be held in blanche for the payment of a red rose. The cause assigned for the grant is, their brave and faithful exertions in favour of the king against the house of Douglas, with whom James had been recently tugging for the throne of Scotland. This charter is dated the 2d February, 1443; and, in the same month, part of the barony of Langholm, and many lands in Lanarkshire, were conferred upon Sir Walter and his son by the same monarch.

After the period of the exchange with Sir Thomas Ingils, Branksome became the principal seat of the Buccleuch family. The castle was enlarged and strengthened by Sir David Scott, the grandson of Sir William, its first possessor. But in 1570-1, the vengeance of Elizabeth, provoked by the inroads of Buccleuch, and his attachment to the cause of Queen Mary, destroyed the castle, and laid waste the lands of Branksome. In the same year the castle was repaired and enlarged by Sir Walter Scott, its brave possessor; but the work was not completed until after his death, in 1574, when the widow finished the building. This appears from the following inscriptions. Around a stone, bearing the arms of Scott of Buccleuch, appears the following legend:

"Sir W. Scott, of Branxholm Knpt Pot of Sir William Scott of Kirkurd Knpt began ye work upon ye 24 of Marche 1571 Sir quha departe at God's pleisour ye 17 April 1574."
On a similar copartment are sculptured the arms of Douglas, with this inscription, "Dame Margaret Douglas his spouse compleat the forsaid work in October, 1576." Over an arched door is inscribed the following moral verse:

In vario. is. nocht. nature. hes. brought.
pat. sal. lest. ay.
thatfore. serve. God. keip. veil. ye. rod. thy.
same. sal. nocht. dekap.
Sir Walter Scot of Branxholm Knight.
Margaret Douglas, 1571.

Branksome Castle continued to be the principal seat of the Buccleuch family, while security was any object in their choice of a mansion. It has since been the residence of the Commissioners, or Chamberlains, of the family. From the various alterations which the building has undergone, it is not only greatly restricted in its dimensions but retains little of the castellated form, if we except one square tower of massy thickness, the only part of the original building which now remains. The whole forms a handsome modern residence lately inhabited by my deceased friend, Adam Ogilvy, Esq. of Hartwoodmyres, Commissioner of his Grace the Duke of Buccleuch.

The extent of the ancient edifice can still be traced by some vestiges of its foundation, and its strength is obvious from the situation on a deep bank surrounded by the Teviot, and flanked by a deep ravine, formed by a precipitous brook. It was anciently surrounded by wood, as appears from the survey of Roxburghshire, made for Pont's Atlas, and preserved in the advocates' Library. This wood was cut about fifty years ago, but is now replaced by the thriving plantations which have been formed by the noble proprietor, for miles around the ancient mansion of his forefathers.
NOTES TO CANTO FIRST.

Note II.
Nine-and-twenty knights of fame
Hung their shields in Branksome Hall.—P. 12.

The ancient barons of Buccleuch, both from feudal sp and from their frontier situation, retained in their ho at Branksome, a number of Gentlemen of their ow who held lands from their chief, for the military se watching and warding his castle. Satchell tells us doggerel poetry,

No baron was better served in Britain;
The barons of Buckleigh they kept their call,
Four-and-twenty gentlemen in their hall,
All being of his name and kin;
Each two had a servant to wait upon them;
Before supper and dinner, most renowned,
The bells rung and the trumpet sowned
And more than that, I do confess,
They kept four-and-twenty pensioners.
Think not I lie, nor do me blame,
For the pensioners I can all name:
There’s men alive, elder than I,
They know if I speak truth, or lie;
Every pensioner a room* did gain,
For service done and to be done;
This I’ll let the reader understand,
The name both of the men and land,
Which they possessed, it is of truth,
Both from the lairds and lords of Buckleigh.

Accordingly, dismounting from his Pegasus, Satche us in prose, the names of twenty-four gentlemen, youn thers of ancient families, who were pensioners to the Buccleuch, and describes the lands which each posse his Border service. In time of war with England, t son was doubtless augmented. Satchells adds, “These

* Room, portion of land.
three pensioners, all of his own name of Scott, and Walter Gladstones, of Whitelaw, a near cousin of my Lord's, as aforesaid, were ready on all occasions, when his honour pleased cause to advertise them. It is known to many of the country better than it is to me, that the rent of these lands, which the lairds and lords of Buccleuch did freely bestow upon their friends, will amount to above twelve or fourteen thousand merks a-year."—History of the Name of Scott, p. 45. An immense sum in those times.

Note III.
And with Jedwood-axe at saddle-bow.—P. 13.

"Of a truth," says Froissart, "the Scottish cannot boast great skill with the bow, but rather bear axes, with which, in time of need, they give heavy strokes." The Jedwood axe was a sort of partisan, used by horsemen, as appears from the arms of Jedburgh, which bear a cavalier mounted, and armed with this weapon. It is also called a Jedwood or Jeddart staff.

Note IV.
They watch against Southern force and guile,
Lest Scope, or Howard, or Percy's powers,
Threaten Branksome's lordly towers,
From Warkworth, or Naworth, or merry Carlisle.—P. 13.

Branksome Castle was continually exposed to the attacks of the English, both from its situation and the restless military disposition of its inhabitants, who were seldom on good terms with their neighbours. The following letter from the Earl of Northumberland to Henry VIII. in 1533, gives an account of a successful inroad of the English, in which the country was plundered up to the gates of the castle, although the invaders failed in their principal object, which was, to kill, or make prisoner, the laird of Buccleuch. It occurs in the Cotton MS. Calig. B. VIII. f. 222.

"Pleaseth yt your most gracious highnes to be advertised, that my comptroller, with Raynald Carnaby, desyred licence of me to invade the realme of Scotland, for the annoysonce of your highnes enemies, where they thought best exploi theye might be done, and to haue to concur withe theyme the inhabitants of Northumberland, suche as was towards me according to theyre assembly, and as by theyre discreions vppone the same they shulde thinke most convenient; and soo they dyde mete vppon Monday, before nyght, being the iii day of this instant monethe, at Wawhope, uppon northe Tyne water, above Tyndail, where they were to the number of xv c men, and soo invadet Scotland, at the hour of vili of the clok at nyght, at a place called Whelc Causay; and before xi of the clok dyd send forth a forrey of Tyndail and Ryddisdail and laide all the resydwae in a bushment, and actyvely dyd set vpon a town called Bransholm, where the lord of Bucloough dwellythe, and purposed theymeselves with a trayne for hym lyke to his accustomed manner, inrysynge to all fraye; albeit that knyght he was not at home, and soo they brynt the said Bransholm, and other townes, as to say Whichestre, Whichester-helme, and Whelley, and haid ordered theymesel, soo that sundry of the said Lord Bucloough's servants, who dyd issue fourthe of his gates, was takyn prisoners. They dyd not leve one house, one stalk of corne, nor one shyef, without the gate of the said Lord Bucloough vnbrnty; and thus scrimaged and frayed, supposing the Lord of Bucloough to be within ili or ili myles to have trayned him to the bushment; and soo in the breyking of the day dyd the forrey and the bushment mete, and reculed homward, making theyr way westward from theyre invasion to be over Lyddersdaill, as intending of the fray from theyre first entry by the Scots walkes, or otherwyse by warnyng, shulde haue bene gyven to Gedworth and the country of Scotland theyreasbout of theyre invasion; whiche Gedworth is from the Whicis Causay vi myles, that thereby the Scots shuld have comen further vnto theyme, and more owte of ordre; and soo upon sundry good consideracons, before they entered Lyddersdaill, as well accompling the inhabitants of the same to be towards your highnesse, and to enforce theyme the more therby, as alsoo to put an occasion of suspect to the kinge of Scots and his counsaill, to be taken against theyme, amongst theymeselves, maid proclamacons, commanding, vpon payne of dethe, assurance to be for the said inhabitants of Lyddersdaill, without any prejudice or hurt to be done by any Inglysman vnto theyme, and soo in good orde abowte the howre of ten of the clok before none, vppone Tewesdaay, dyd, pas through the said Lyddersdaill, when dyd come diverse of the said inhabitants there to my servauntes, under the said assurance, offering theymselfs with any service they couthe make; and thus, thanks be to Godde, your highnes’ subjects, abowte the howre of xii of the clok at none the same daye, came into this youre highness realme, bringing wt theyme above xi Scottsmen prisoners, one of theyme named Scot, of the surname and kyn of the said Lord of Buclough, and of his household; they brought also ccc nowte, and above ix horse and mares, keeping in savetie frome losse or hurte all your said highnes subjects. There was alsoo a towne called Newbiggins, by divers fotmen of Tyndaill and Blyddesdaill, takyn vp of the night, and spoyled, when was slayne if Scottsmen of the said towne, and many Scotts there hurte; your highnes subjects was xiii myles within the ground of Scotlande, and is frome my house at Werkworth, above
ix of the most evil passage, where great snawes’dothe lye; eretofore the same townes now brynt haith not at any time in the mynd of man in any warrs been enterprised unto nowe;
your subjects were therto more encouraged for the better advancement of your highnes service, the said Lord of Buclough beyng always a mortall enemy to this your graces realme, and he dyd say, within xiiii days before, he would see who durst lye near hym; wt many other cruel words, the knowledge whereof was certailly baid to my said servauntes before theyre enterpric maid vpon him; most humbly be-seeking your majesty, that youre highnes thankes may concur vnto theyme, whose names be here inclosed, and to have in your most gracious memory, the paynfull and diligent service of my pore servaunt Wharton, and thus, as I am most bounden, shall dispose wt them that be under me f.... annoy-sance of your highnes enemies.” In resentment of this foray, Baccleach, with other Border chiefs, assembled an army of 3000 riders, with which they penetrated into Northumberland; and laid waste the country as far as the banks of Bramish. They baffled, or defeated, the English forces opposed to them, and returned loaded with prey.—Pinkerton's History, Vol. II. p. 318.

Note V.

Bards long shall tell,

Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch succeeded to his grandfather, Sir David, in 1492. He was a brave and powerful baron, and warden of the west marches of Scotland. His death was the consequence of a feud betwixt the Scotts and Kerrs, the history of which is necessary to explain repeated allusions in the romance.

In the year 1528, in the words of Pitscottle, "The Earl of Angus, and the rest of the Douglasses ruled all which they liked, and no man durst say the contrary; wherefore the king (James V., then a minor) was heavily displeased, and would have been out of their hands, if he might by any way And, to that effect, wrote a quiet and secret letter with his own hand, and sent it to the laird of Buccleuch, beseeching him that he would come with his kin and friends, and all the force that he might be, and meet him at Melross, at his home passing, and there to take him out of the Douglasses hands and to put him to liberty, to use himself among the lave (rest. of his lords, as he thinks expedient.

"This letter was quietly directed and sent by one of the king's own secret servants, which was received very thankful ly by the laird of Buccleuch, who was very glad thereof, to be put to such charges and familiarity with his prince, and did great diligence to perform the king's writing, and to bring the matter to pass as the king desired: And, to that effect, con vened all his kin and friends, and all that would do for him to ride with him to Melross, when he knew of the king's coming. And so he brought with him six hundred spears Eddlesdale, and Annandale, and countrymen, and chase 0
NOTES TO CANTO FIRST.

about, and held themselves quiet while that the king returned out of Jedburgh, and came to Melross, to remain there all that night.

* But when the Lord Hume, Cessfoord, and Fernyhirst, (the chiefs of the clan of Kerr,) took their leave of the king, and returned home, then appeared the Lord of Buckleuch in sight, and his company with him, in an arrayed battle, intending to have fulfilled the king's petition, and therefore came stoutly forward on the back side of Haliden hill. By that the Earl of Angus, with George Douglas his brother, and sundry other of his friends, seeing this army coming, they marvelled what the matter meant; while at the last they knew the laird of Buccleuch, with a certain company of the thieves of Annandale. With him they were less affaried, and made them manfully to the field contrary them, and said to the king in this manner, 'Sir, yon is Buckleuch, and thieves of Annandale with him, to unbeset your Grace from the gate (i.e. interrupt your passage.) I vow to God they shall either fight or flee; and ye shall tarry here on this know, and my brother George with you, with any other company you please; and I shall pass, and put yon thieves off the ground, and rid the gate unto your grace, or else die for it.' The king tarried still, as was devised; and George Douglas with him, and sundry other lords, such as the Earl of Lennox and the Lord Erakin, and some of the king's own servants; but all the lave (rest) past with the Earl of Angus to the field against the laird of Buccleuch, who joyned and countered cruelly both the said parties in the field of Darnelinner,* either against other, with uncertain victory. But at the last, the Lord Hume hearing word of that matter how it stood, returned again to the king in all possible haste, with him the lairds of Cessfoord and Fairnyhirst, to the number of fourscore spears, and set freshly on the lap and wing of the laird of Buccleuch's field, and shortly bare them backward to the ground; which caused the laird

* Darnwick, near Melrose. The place of conflict is still called Skinner's Field, from a corruption of Skirmish Field. of Buccleuch, and the rest of his friends, to go back a whom they followed and chased: and especially the li Cessfoored and Fairnyhirst followed furiously, till at t of a path the laird of Cessfoored was slain by the strol spear by an Elliot, who was then servant to the laird o cleuch. But when the laird of Cessfoord was slain, th ceased. The Earl of Angus turned again with great me and victory, and thanked God that he saved him fro chance, and passed with the king to Melrose, where t mained all that night. On the morn they passed to Edi with the king, who was very sad and dolorous of the sla of the laird of Cessfoord, and many other gentlemen as men slain by the laird of Buccleuch, containing the nun forescore and fifteen, which died in the defence of the and at the command of his writing."

I am not the first who has attempted to celebrate in the renown of this ancient baron, and his hazardous att procure his sovereign’s freedom. In a Scottish Latin pe find the following verses:—

Valerius Scotus Balchuchius.

Egregio suscepto faciunique libertate Regis, ac allis rebus clarus, sub Jacobo V. Aº. Christi, 1526.

Intentatam allis, nullique audita priorum
Audet, nec pavidum morsve, metuave quattì,
Libertatem allis soliti transcriptere Reges:
Subreptam banc Regi restituisse paras,
Si vincis, quanta o succedunt praemia dextrae,
Sin victus, falsas spes jace, pone animam.
Hostica vis nocuit: stant altae robora mentis
Atque decus. Vinceit, Rege probante, fides.
Inrata queis animis virtus, quoque acrior ardor
Obaidet, obscuris nox premat an tenebris?

Heroes ex omni Historia Scotiae recissi, Auctore Jo
Jonstacio Abredonensi Scoto, 1600.
In consequence of the battle of Melrose, there ensued a deadly feud betwixt the names of Scott and Kerr, which, in spite of all means used to bring about an agreement, raged for many years upon the borders. Buccleuch was imprisoned, and his estates forfeited, in the year 1535, for levying war against the Kerrs, and restored by act of Parliament, dated 15 March, 1542, during the regency of Mary of Loraine. But the most signal act of violence, to which this quarrel gave rise, was, the murder of Sir Walter himself, who was slain by the Kerrs in the streets of Edinburgh, in 1552. This is the event alluded to in Stanza VII.; and the poem is supposed to open shortly after it had taken place.

The feud between these two families was not reconciled in 1586, when both chieftains paraded the streets of Edinburgh with their followers, and it was expected their first meeting would decide their quarrel. But, on July 14th of the same year, Colvil, in a letter to Mr. Bacon, informs him, "that there was great trouble upon the borders, which would continue till order should be taken by the queen of England and the king, by reason of the two young Scots chieftains, Cesford and Baclogh, and of the present necessity and scarcity of corn amongst the Scots Borderers and riders. That there had been a private quarrel betwixt those two lairds, on the Borders, which was like to have turned to blood: but the fear of the general trouble had reconciled them, and the injuries which they thought to have committed against each other, were now transferred upon England: not unlike that emulation in France between the Baron de Biron and Mons. Jeverie, who, being both ambitious of honour, undertook more hazardous enterprises against the enemy than they would have done if they had been at concord together."—Birch's Memorials, Vol. II. p. 67.

Note VI.

No! vainly to each holy shrine,
In mutual pilgrimage, they drew.—P. 14.

Among other expedients resorted to for stanching the feud betwixt the Scots and the Kerrs, there was a bond executed.
in 1523, between the heads of each clan, binding them to perform reciprocally the four principal pilgrimages of land, for the benefit of the souls of those of the opposite who had fallen in the quarrel. This indenture is printed Minstreley of the Scottish Border, Vol. I. But either it took effect, or else the feud was renewed shortly afterwa Such actions were not uncommon in feudal times; they might be expected, they were often, as in the present case of the effect desired. When Sir Walter Mauny, the ren d follower of Edward III., had taken the town of Ryoll, in cony, he remembered to have heard that his father la buried, and offered a hundred crowns to any who could him his grave. A very old man appeared before Sir and informed him of the manner of his father's death, the place of his sepulture. It seems the Lord of Mauny was a great tournament, unhorsed, and wounded to the death, con knigh, of the house of Mirepoix, whose kinsman bishop of Cambrai. For this deed he was held at feud relations of the knight, until he agreed to undertake a page to the shrine of St. James of Compostella, for the be the soul of the deceased. But as he returned through town of Ryoll, after accomplishment of his vow, he wa and treacherously slain, by the kindred of the knight who had killed. Sir Walter, guided by the old man, visited th tomb of his father; and, having read the inscription, was in Latin, he caused the body to be raised, and tran to his native city of Valenciennes, where masses were days of Froissart, duly said for the soul of the unfortunate grim.—Cronycel of Froissart, Vol. I. p. 123.

Note VII.

While Castleford owns the rule of Car.—P. 14.

The family of Ker, Kerr, or Car,* was very powerful Border. Fynes Morrison remarks, in his Travels, th

* The name is spelled differently by the various fami
NOTES TO CANTO FIRST.

influence extended from the village of Preston-Grange, in Lothian, to the limits of England. Cessford Castle, the ancient baronial residence of the family, is situated near the village of Morebattle, within two or three miles of the Cheviot Hills.—It has been a place of great strength and consequence, but is now ruinous. Tradition affirms, that it was founded by Halbert, or Habbie Kerr, a gigantic warrior, concerning whom many stories are current in Roxburghshire. The Duke of Roxburghe represents Ker of Cessford. A distinct and powerful branch of the same name own the Marquis of Lothian as their chief: Hence the distinction betwixt Kers of Cessford and Fairnicht.

Note VIII.

Before Lord Cranstoun she should wed.—P. 15.

The Cranstouns, Lord Cranstoun, are an ancient Border family, whose chief seat was at Crailing, in Teviotdale. They were at this time at feud with the clan of Scott; for it appears that the lady of Buccleuch, in 1557, beset the laird of Cranstoun, seeking his life. Nevertheless, the same Cranston, or perhaps his son, was married to a daughter of the same lady.

Note IX.

Of Bethune's line of Picardie.—P. 17.

The Bethunes were of French origin, and derived their name from a small town in Artois. There were several distinguished families of the Bethunes in the neighbouring province of Picardy; they numbered among their descendants the celebrated Duc de Sully; and the name was accounted among the most noble in France, while aught noble remained in that country. The family of Bethune, or Beatoun, in Fife, produced three learned and dignified prelates; namely, Cardinal Beaton, and two successive archbishops of Glasgow, all of bear it. Car is selected, not as the most correct, but as the most poetical reading.

NOTES TO CANTO FIRST.

whom flourished about the date of the romance. Of this family was descended Dame Janet Beaton, Lady Buccleuch, widow of Sir Walter Scott of Branksome. She was a woman of masculine spirit, as appeared from her riding at the head of her son's clan, after her husband's murder. She also possessed the hereditary abilities of her family in such a degree, that the superstition of the vulgar imputed them to supernatural knowledge. With this was mingled, by faction, the foul accusation, of her having influenced Queen Mary to the murder of her husband. One of the placards, preserved in Buchanan's Detection, accuses of Darnley's murder "the Erle Bothwell, Mr. James Balfour, the person of Fliske Mr. David Chalmers, black Mr. John Spens, who was principal deviser of the murder; and the Quene, assenting thairto, throw the persuasione of the Erle Bothwell, and the witchcraft of Lady Buckleuch."

Note X.

He learned the art that none may name,
In Padua, far beyond the sea.—P. 16.

Padua was long supposed, by the Scottish peasants, to be the principal school of Necromancy. The Earl of Gowrie, slain at Perth, in 1600, pretended, during his studies in Italy, to have acquired some knowledge of the cabala; by which, he said, he could charm snakes, and work other miracles; and, in particular, could produce children without the intercourse of the sexes.—See the Examination of Wemyss of Bogle before the Privy Council, concerning Gowrie's conspiracy.

Note XI.

His form no darkening shadow traced
Upon the sunny wall.—P. 16.

The shadow of a necromancer is independent of the sun.—Glycas informs us that Simon Magus caused his shadow to go before him, making people believe it was an attendant spirit. Heywood's Hierarchie, p. 475. The vulgar conceive, that when a class of students have made a certain progress in their mystic studies, they are obliged to run through a subterraneous hall, where the devil literally catches the hindmost in the race, unless he crosses the hall so speedily, that the arch-enemy can only apprehend his shadow. In the latter case, the person of the sage never after throws any shade; and those who have thus lost their shadow, always prove the best magicians.

Note XII.

The viewless forms of air.—P. 16.

The Scottish vulgar, without having any very defined notion of their attributes, believe in the existence of an intermediate class of spirits residing in the air, or in the waters; to whose agency they ascribe floods, storms, and all such phenomena as their own philosophy cannot readily explain. They are supposed to interfere in the affairs of mortals, sometimes with a malevolent purpose, and sometimes with milder views. It is said, for example, that a gallant baron, having returned from the Holy Land to his castle of Drummelzair, found his fair lady nursing a healthy child, whose birth did not by any means correspond to the date of his departure. Such an occurrence, to the credit of the dames of the crusaders be it spoken, was so rare, that it required a miraculous solution. The lady, therefore, was believed, when she averred confidently, that the Spirit of the Tweed had issued from the river while she was walking upon its bank, and compelled her to submit to his embraces; and the name of Twedie was bestowed upon the child, who afterwards became Baron of Drummelzair, and chief of a powerful clan. To those spirits were also ascribed, in Scotland, the

—'Airy tongues, that syllable men's names,
On sands, and shores, and desert wildernesses.'

When the workmen were engaged in erecting the ancient church of Old Deer, in Aberdeenshire, upon a small hill called Bissan, they were surprised to find that the work was impeded by supernatural obstacles. At length, the spirit of the River was heard to say,
NOTES TO CANTO FIRST.

It is not here, it is not here,
That ye shall build the church of Deer;
But on Taptillery,
Where many a corpse shall lie.

The site of the edifice was accordingly transferred to Taptillery, an eminence at some distance from the place where the building had been commenced.—Macfarlane's MSS. I mention these popular fables, because the introduction of the River and Mountain Spirits may not, at first sight, seem to accord with the general tone of the romance, and the superstitions of the country where the scene is laid.

Note XIII.
_A fancied moss-trooper, &c._—P. 19.

This was the usual appellation of the marauders upon the Borders; a profession diligently pursued by the inhabitants on both sides, and by none more actively and successfully than by Buccleuch's clan. Long after the union of the crowns, the moss-troopers, although sunk in reputation, and no longer enjoying the pretext of national hostility, continued to pursue their calling.

Fuller includes among the wonders of Cumberland, "The Moss-troopers; so strange is the condition of their living, if considered in their Original, Increase, Height, Decay, and Ruine."

1. "Original. I conceive them the same called Borderers in Mr. Cambden; and characterized by him to be, a wild and warlike people. They are called Moss-troopers, because dwelling in the mooses, and riding in troops together. They dwell in the bounds, or meeting of the two kingdoms, but obey the laws of neither. They come to church as seldom as the 29 of February comes into the kalender.

2. "Increase. When England and Scotland were united in Great Britain, they that formerly lived by hostile incursions, betook themselves to the robbing of their neighbours. Their sons are free of the trade by their father's copy. They are like
NOTES TO CANTO FIRST.

To Job, not in plenty and patience, but in sudden plenty and poverty; sometimes having flocks and herds in the morning, none at night, and perchance many again next day. They may give for their motto, vivitur ex rapto, stealing from their honest neighbours what they sometimes require. They are a nest of hornets; strike one, and stir all of them about your ears. Indeed; if they promise safely to conduct a traveller, they will perform it with the fidelity of a Turkish janizary; otherwise, we be to him that falleth into their quarters!

3. "Height. Amounting, forty years since, to some thousands. Those compelled the vicinage to purchase their security, by paying a constant rent to them. When in their greatest height, they had two great enemies—the Laws of the Land, and the Lord William Howard of Naworth. He sent many of them to Carlisle, to that place where the officer doth always his work by daylight. Yet these Moss-troopers, if possibly they could procure a pardon for a condemned person of their company, would advance great sums out of their common stock, who, in such a case, cast in their lots amongst themselves, and all have one purse.

4. "Decay. Caused by the wisdom, valour, and diligence, of the Right Honourable Charles Lord Howard, Earl of Carlisle, who routed these English Tories with his regiment. His severity unto them will not only be excused, but commended, by the judicious, who consider how our great lawyer doth describe such persons who are solemnly outlawed. Bruton, lib. 3. trac. 2. cap. 11. Ex tunc gerunt caput lupinum, ita quod sine judiciali inquisitione rite percant, et sicum sumum judicium portent; et merito sine lege percunt, qui secundum lege vivere recusarunt. —Thenceforward (after that they are outlawed) they wear a wolf's head, so that they lawfully may be destroyed, without any judicial infliction, as who carry their own condemnation about them, and deservedly die without law, because they refused to live according to law.

5. "Ruine. Such was the success of this worthy lord's severity, that he made a thorough reformation among them; and the ringleaders being destroyed, the rest are reduced to legall
NOTES TO CANTO FIRST.

obedience, and so, I trust, will continue."—Fuller's Worthies of England, p. 216.

The last public mention of moss-troopers occurs during the civil wars of the 17th century, when many ordinances of parliament were directed against them.

Note XIV.

How the brave boy, in future war,
Should tame the Unicorn's pride,
Exalt the Crescents and the Star.—P. 20.

The arms of the Kerrs of Cessford were, Vert on a chevron, betwixt three unicorns' heads erased argent, three mullets sa-bile; crest, a unicorn's head erased proper. The Scots of Buccleuch bore, Or on a bend azure; a star of six points betwixt two crescents of the first.

Note XV.

William of Deloraine.—P. 20.

The lands of Deloraine are joined to those of Buccleuch in Ettrick Forest. They were immemorially possessed by the Buccleuch family, under the strong title of occupancy, although no charter was obtained from the crown until 1545.—Like other possessions, the lands of Deloraine were occasionally granted by them to vassals, or kinsmen, for Border-service.
Satchells mentions, among the twenty-four gentlemen pensioners of the family, "William Scott, commonly called Cut-at-the-Black, who had the lands of Nether Deloraine for his service." And again, "This William of Deloraine, commonly called Cut-at-the-Black, was a brother of the ancient house of Haining, which house of Haining is descended from the ancient house of Hassendean." The lands of Deloraine now give an earl's title to the descendant of Henry, the second surviving son of the Duchess of Buccleuch and Monmouth. I have endeavoured to give William of Deloraine the attributes which characterized the Borderers of his day; for which I can only plead Froissart's apology, that "it behoveth, in a lynage, some to be sly the and outrageous, to maynteyne and sustayne the peesable."
NOTES TO CANTO FIRST.

165 to my Marchman, I beg leave to transcribe, from the hor, the speech of Amergot Marcell, a captain of the was Companions, a robber, and a pillager of the coun-vergne, who had been bribed to sell his strong-holds, some a more honourable military life under the bane Earl of Armagnac. But "when he remembered alle was sorrowful; his tresour: he thought he wolde not

; he was wonte dayly to serche for newe pyllages, encresed his profyte, and then he sawe that alle was hym. Then he sayde and imagyned, that to pyll and all thyng considered) was a good lyfe, and so repent-
F his good doing. On a tyme, he said to his old com-Sirs, there is no sorte nor glory in this world men of warre, but to use such lyfe as we have done in What a joy was it to us when we rode forth at ad-and somtyme found by the way a riche priour or mer-a route of mulettes of Mountpellyer, of Narbonne, of Fongans, of Besyres, of Tholous, or of Carcassone, ch cloth of Brussels, or peltre ware comynge fro the laden with spycery, fro Bruges, fro Damas, or fro re: whatsoever we met, all was ours, or els ransouned asures; dayly we gato new money, and the vyllaynes me and of Lymosyn dayly provyded and brought to
I whete mele, good wynes, beffes, and fatte mottons, and wylde foule: We were ever furnyshed as tho seen kings. When we rode forthe, al the countrey for feare: all was ours goyng and comyng. Howe arist, I and the Bourge of Compayne, I and Pe-noys took Caluset: how dyd we scale, with lytell strong castell of Marquell, pertayning to the Earl Doltept it nat past five days, but I receyved for it, on a e, fyve thousande frunkes, and forgave one thousande ve of the Earl Dolphin's children. By my sayth, this re and a good lyfe; wherefore I reputte myselve sore
, in that I have rendered up the fortress of Aloys; for are kept fro alle the worlde, and the daye that I gave s fournished with vytaylles, to have been kept seven yere without any re-vytaylynge. This Eri of Armynake hath decveyed me: Olyve Barbe, and Perot le Bernoys, shewed to me how I shulde repente myselfe: certayne I sore repente my-selfe of what I have done."—Proissort, Vol. II. p. 185.

Note XVI.

By wily turns, by desperate bounds,
Had baffled Percy's best blood-hounds.—P. 20.

The kings and heroes of Scotland, as well as the Border-riders, were sometimes obliged to study how to evade the pursuit of blood-hounds. Barbour informs us, that Robert Bruce was repeatedly tracked by sleuth-dogs. On one occasion, he escaped by wading a bow-shot down a brook; and ascending into a tree by a branch which overhung the water: thus leaving no trace on land of his footsteps, he baffled the scent. The pursuers came up:

Rycht to the burn thai passyt ware,
Bot the sleuth-hund made stinting thar,
And waueryt lang tymel ta and fra,
That he na certain gate couth ga:
Till at the last that John of Lorn,
Perseu vt the hund the sleuth had lorne.

The Bruce, Book vii.

A sure way of stopping the dog was to spill blood upon the track, which destroyed the discriminating fineness of his scent.
A captive was sometimes sacrificed on such occasions. Henry the Minstrell tells a romantic story of Wallace, founded on this circumstance:—The hero's little band had been joined by an Irishman, named Fawdon, or Fadzean, a dark, savage, and suspicious character. After a sharp skirmish at Black-Een Side, Wallace was forced to retreat with only sixteen followers. The English pursued with a border sleuth-hunt, or bloodhound:
NOTES TO CANTO FIRST.

In Geierland there was that brachet bred,
Sicker of scent, to follow them that fled;
So was he used in Eseke and Liddesdail,
While (i.e. till) she gat blood no fleeing might avail.

In the retreat, Fawdon, tired, or affecting to be so, would go no farther: Wallace, having in vain argued with him, in hasty anger, struck off his head, and continued the retreat. When the English came up, their hound stayed upon the dead body:

The aleuth stopped at Fawdon, till she stood,
Nor farther would fra time she fund the blood.

The story concludes with a fine Gothic scene of terror. Wallace took refuge in the solitary tower of Gask. Here he was disturbed at midnight by the blast of a horn: he sent out his attendants by two and two, but no one returned with tidings. At length, when he was left alone, the sound was heard still louder. The champion descended, sword in hand; and at the gate of the tower was encountered by the headless spectre of Fawdon, whom he had slain so rashly. Wallace, in great terror, fled up into the tower, tore open the boards of a window, leapt down fifteen feet in height, and continued his flight up the river. Looking back to Gask, he discovered the tower on fire, and the form of Fawdon upon the battlements, dilated to an immense size, and holding in his hand a blaz- ing rafter. The Minstrel concludes,

Trust ryhgt wele, that all this be sooth, indeed,
Supposing it be no point of the creed.

The Wallace, Book v.

Mr. Ellis has extracted this tale as a sample of Henry's poetry.—Specimens of English Poetry, Vol. I. p. 351.
NOTES TO CANTO FIRST.

Note XVII.

Dimly he viewed the Mount-hill's mound.—P. 22

This is a round artificial mount near Hawick, whis its name, (Med. Ang. Sax. Concilium Concertus) wably ancietly used as a place for assembling a nationcil of the adjaceat tribes. There are many such in Scotland, and they are sometimes, but rarely, of form.

Note XVIII.

Beneath the tower of HazelDean.—P. 22.

The estate of HazelDean, corruptly Hassendeane, l formerly to a family of Scotts, thus commemorated
chells:

Hassendeane came without a call,
The ancienctest house among them all.

Note XIX.

On Minto-crage the moon-beams giint.—P. 23.

A romantic assemblage of cliffs, which rise sudden-the vale of Teviot, in the immediate vicinitie of the seat from which Lord Minto takes his title. A small p on a projecting crag, commanding a most beautiful termed Barnhills Bed. This Barnhills is said to ha a robber, or outlaw. There are remains of a strong beneath the rocks, where he is supposed to have dw from which he derived his name. On the summit of t are the fragments of another ancient tower, in a pict situation. Among the houses cast down by the Earl forde, in 1545, occur the towers of Easter Barnhills, Minto crag, with Minto town and place. Sir Gilber tather to the present Lord Minto, was the author of a ful pastoral song, of which the following is a more copy than is usually published. The poetical mind
Gilbert Eliot has descended to his family.
NOTES TO CANTO FIRST.

My sheep I neglected, I broke my sheep-hook,
And all the gay haunts of my youth I forsook:
No more for Amynta fresh garlands I wove;
Ambition, I said, would soon cure me of love.
But what had my youth with ambition to do?
Why left I Amynta? Why broke I my vow?

Through regions remote, in vain do I rove,
And bid the wide world secure me from love.
Ah, fool to imagine, that aught could subdue
A love so well founded, a passion so true!
Ah, give me my sheep, and my sheep-hook restore,
And I'll wander from love and Amynta no more!

Alas! 'tis too late at thy fate to repine!
Poor shepherd, Amynta no more can be thine!
Thy tears are all fruitless, thy wishes are vain,
The moments neglected return not again.
Ah! what had my youth with ambition to do?
Why left I Amynta? Why broke I my vow?

Note XX.

Ancient Riddell's fair domain.—P. 24.

The family of Riddel have been very long in possession of the barony called Riddell, or Rydale, part of which still bears the latter name. Tradition carries their antiquity to a point extremely remote: and is, in some degree, sanctioned by the discovery of two stone coffins, one containing an earthen pot filled with ashes and arms, bearing a legible date, A.D. 727;
the other dated 938, and filled with the bones of a man of gigantic size. These coffins were discovered in the foundations of what was, but has long ceased to be, the chapel of Riddell; and as it was argued with plausibility, that they contained the remains of some ancestors of the family, they were deposited in the modern place of sepulchre, comparatively so termed, though built in 1110. But the following curious and authentic documents warrant most conclusively the epithet of "ancient Riddell:" 1st, A charter by David I. to Walter Rydale, sheriff of Roxburgh, confirming all the estates of Lillesclive, &c. of which his father, Gervasius de Rydale, died possessed.—2dly, A bull of Pope Adrian IV., confirming the will of Walter de Ridale, knight, in favour of his brother Anschitil de Ridale, dated 8th April, 1155. 3dly, A bull of Pope Alexander III., confirming the said will of Walter de Ridale, bequeathing to his brother Anschitil the lands of Lillesclive, Whettunes, &c. and ratifying the bargain betwixt Anschitil and Huctredus, concerning the church of Lillesclive, in consequence of the mediation of Malcom II., and confirmed by a charter from that monarch. This bull is dated 17th June, 1160. 4thly, A bull of the same Pope, confirming the will of Sir Anschitil de Ridale, in favour of his son Walter, conveying the said lands of Lillesclive and others, dated the 10th March, 1120. It is remarkable, that Lillesclive, otherwise Rydale, or Riddel, and the Whettunes, have descended, through a long train of ancestors, without ever passing into a collateral line, to the person of Sir John Buchanan Riddle, Bart., of Riddell, the lineal descendant and representative of Sir Anschitil.—These circumstances appeared worthy of notice in a Border work.

Note XXI.

As glanced his eye o'er Halidon.—P. 25.

Halidon was an ancient seat of the Kerrs of Cessford, now demolished. About a quarter of a mile to the northward lay the field of battle betwixt Buccleuch and Angus, which is called to this day the Skirmish Field.—See the 4th note on this Canto.

Note XXII.

Old Melrose rose, and fair Tweed ran.—P. 25.

The ancient and beautiful monastery of Melrose was founded by King David I. Its ruins afford the finest specimens of Gothic architecture, and Gothic sculpture, which Scotland can boast. The stone, of which it is built, though it was rethe weather for so many ages, retains perfect sharpness, et even the most minute ornaments seem as entire as newly wrought. In some of the cloisters, as is hinted next Canto, there are representations of flowers, vegetables, carved in stone, with accuracy and precision so that we almost distrust our senses, when we consider the difficulty of subjecting so hard a substance to such intrignant exquisite modulation. This superb convent was founded in the 11th century, and the monks were of the Cistercian order.
At the time of the Reformation, they shared in the prosperity of sensuality and irregularity thrown upon man churchmen. The old words of Galashile, a favourite poem of the time, ran thus:

O the monks of Melrose made gude kail
On Fridays, when they fasted;
They wanted neither beef nor ale,
As long as their neighbour’s lasted.

Kail, Broth.
NOTES TO CANTO SECOND.

Note I.
_When silver edges the imagery,
And the scrolls that teach thee to live and die._—P. 28.

The buttresses, ranged along the sides of the ruins of Melrose abbey, are, according to the Gothic style, richly carved and fretted, containing niches for the statues of saints, and labelled with scrolls, bearing appropriate texts of Scripture. Most of these statues have been demolished.

Note II.
_—St. David's ruined pile._—P. 30.

David I. of Scotland purchased the reputation of sanctity, by founding, and liberally endowing, not only the monastery of Melrose, but those of Kelso, Jedburgh, and many others, which led to the well-known observation of his successor, that he was _a sore saint for the crown._

Note III.
_—Lands and livings many a rood,
Had gifted the shrine for their souls' repose._—P. 30.

The Buccleuch family were great benefactors to the Abbey of Melrose. As early as the reign of Robert II., Robert Scott, baron of Murieston and Rankelburn, (now Buccleuch,) gave to the monks the lands of Hinkery, in Ettrick Forest, _pro salute animae suae._—Chartulary of Melrose, 28th May, 1415.
NOTES TO CANTO SECOND.

Note IV.
Prayer know I hardly one;
*  *  *  *
Save to patter an Ave Mary,
When I ride on a Border foray.—P. 32.

The Borderers were, as may be supposed, very ignorant about religious matters. Colville, in his Paranaësis or admo- nition, states, that the reformed divines were so far from undertaking distant journeys to convert the Heathen, “as I wold wis at God that ye wold only go bot to the Hiëlands and borders of our own realm, to gain our awin countreymen, who, for lack of preaching and ministration of the sacra- ments, must, with tyme, becum either infidells or atheists.” But we learn from Leslie, that, however deficient in real religion, they regularly told their beads, and never with more zeal than when going on a plundering expedition.

Note V.
Beneath their feet were the bones of the dead.—P. 32.
The cloisters were frequently used as places of sepulture. An instance occurs in Dryburgh Abbey, where the cloister has an inscription, bearing, Hic jacet frater Archibaldus.

Note VI.
So had he seen, in faire Castile,
The youth in glittering squadrons start;
Sudden the flying jennet wheel,
And hir the-unexpected dart.—P. 33.

"By my faith," said the Duke of Lancaster, (to a Portuguese squire,) "of all the feates of armes that the Castellyans, and they of your countrey doth use, the castyng of their darters best pleaseth me, and gladly I wolde se it; for, as I hear say, if they strike one aryghte, without he be well armed, the dart will pierce him throughe."—"By my faith, Sir," said the squyer, "ye say trouth; for I have seen many a grete stroke given with them, which at one time cost us derely, and was to us great displeasure; for, at the said skirmishe, Sir
174  NOTES TO CANTO SECOND.

John Laurence of Coygne was striken with a dart in such wise, that the head perced all the plates of his cote of mayle, and a sacke stopped with sylke, and passed through his body, so that he fell down dead."—Froissart, Vol. II. ch. 44.—This mode of fighting with darts was imitated in the military game called Juego de las casas, which the Spaniards borrowed from their Moorish invaders. A Saracen champion is thus described by Froissart: "Among the Sarazins, there was a yonge knight called Agalinger Dolyferne; he was always wel mounted on a redy and a lyght horse; it seemed, when the horse ranne, that he did ryde in the ayre. The knights seemed to be a good man of arms by his dedes; he bare always of usage three fethered darts, and rychte well he could handle them; and, according to their custome, he was clene armed, with a long white towell about his heed. His apparell was blacke, and his own colour browne, and a good horseman. The Crysten men say, they thoughte he dyd such deeds of armes for the love of some yonge lady of his countrey. And true it was, that he loved entirely the king of Thune's daughtar named the Lady Azala; she was inherytour to the realme of Thunes, after the decease of the kyng, her father. This Agalinger was sone to the Duke of Olyferne. I can nat telle if they were married together after or nat; but it was shewed me, that this knyght, for love of the sayd ladye, during the siege, did many feats of armes. The knyghtes of Frannce wold fayne have taken hym; but they colde never attrape nor inclose hym, his horse was so swyft, and so redy to his hand that alwaies he escaped."—Vol. II. ch. 71.

Note VII.

—— Thy low and lonely urn,
O gallant chief of Otterburne.—P. 34.

The famous and desperate battle of Otterburne was fought 15th August, 1388, betwixt Henry Percy, called Hotspur, and James Earl of Douglas. Both these renowned champions were at the head of a chosen body of troops, and they were rivals in military fame; so that Froissart affirms, "Of all,
NOTES TO CANTO SECOND.

... and encounterings that I have made mention of before in all this history, great or small, this battle treat of nowe was one of the sorest and best foughten, at cowardes or saynte hertes; for there was neyther so nor sayyer but that dyde his devoyre, and fought to hande. This battle was lyke the battle of Boli, the which was valiantly fought and endured." The of the conflict is well known: Percy was made prisoner, the Scots won the day, dearly purchased by the death of gallant general, the Earl of Douglas, who was slain in them. He was buried at Melrose, beneath the high altar. Kasquye was done reverently, and on his bodye layde a of stone, and his baner hangyng over hym."—Freisart, [, p. 161.

Note VIII.

—Dark knight of Liddesdale.—34.

Isam Douglas, called the knight of Liddesdale, flourished the reign of David II.; and was so distinguished by his, that he was called the flower of Chivalry. Never-, he tarnished his renown by the cruel murder of Sir and Ramsey of Dalhousie, originally his friend and r in arms. The king had conferred upon Ramsey the idom of Teviotalde, to which Douglass pretended some

In revenge of this preference, the knight of Liddes-ume down upon Ramsey, while he was administering — at Hawick, seized and carried him off to his remote accessible castle of Hermitage, where he threw his unste prisoner, horse and man, into a dungeon, and left o perish of hunger. It is said, the miserable captive ged his existence for several days by the corn which fell granary above the vault in which he was confined. ask was the royal authority, that David, although highly here is something affecting in the manner in which the lor of Lockleven turns from describing the death of incensed at this atrocious murder, found himself obliged to appoint the knight of Liddedale successor to his victim, as sheriff of Teviotdale. But he was soon after slain, while hunting in Ettricke Forest, by his own godson and chieftain, William, Earl of Douglas, in revenge, according to some authors, of Ramsey's murder: although a popular tradition, preserved in a ballad quoted by Godscroft, and some parts of which are still preserved, ascribes the resentment of the Earl to jealousy.

The place, where the knight of Liddedale was killed, is called, from his name, William-Cross, upon the ridge of a hill called William-hope, betwixt Tweed and Yarrow. His body, according to Godscroft, was carried to Linsean church the first night after his death, and thence to Melrose, where he was interred with great pomp, and where his tomb is still shown.

the gallant Ramsey, to the general sorrow which it excited:

To tell you there of the maner,
It is but sorrow for til here;
He wes the grettest menyd man
That ony cowth have thougght of than,
Of his state, or of mare be fare;
All menyth him, bath bettyr and war;
The rych and pur him menyde bath,
For of his dede was mekil skath.

Some years ago, a person digging for stones, about the old castle of Hermitage, broke into a vault, containing a quantity of chaff, some bones, and pieces of iron; amongst others, the curb of an ancient bridle, which the author has since given to the Earl of Dalhousie, under the impression, that it possibly may be a relic of his brave ancestor. The worthy clergyman of the parish has mentioned this discovery, in his statistical account of Castletown.
NOTES TO CANTO SECOND.

Note IX.

The moon on the east oriel shone.—P. 34.

It is impossible to conceive a more beautiful specimen of the lightness and elegance of Gothic architecture, when in its purity, than the eastern window of Melrose Abbey. Sir James Hall of Dunghs, Bart. has, with great ingenuity and plausibility, traced the Gothic order through its various forms, and seemingly eccentric ornaments, to an architectural imitation of wicker work; of which, as we learn from some of the legends, the earliest Christian churches were constructed. In such an edifice, the original of the clustered pillars is traced to a set of round posts, begirt with slender rods of willow, whose loose summits were brought to meet from all quarters, and bound together artificially, so as to produce the framework of the roof: and the tracery of our Gothic windows is displayed in the meeting and interlacing of rods and hoops, affording an inexhaustible variety of beautiful forms of open work. This ingenious system is alluded to in the romance. Sir James Hall's Essay on Gothic Architecture is published in The Edinburgh Philosophical Transactions.

Note X.

They cast them down on a marble stone,
A Scottish monarch slept below.—P. 34.

A large marble stone, in the chancel of Melrose, is pointed out as the monument of Alexander II., one of the greatest of our early kings; others say, it is the resting place of Waldeve, one of the early abbots, who died in the odour of sanctity.

Note XI.

——— The wonderous Michael Scott.—P. 35.

Sir Michael Scott of Balwearie flourished during the 15th century, and was one of the ambassadors sent to bring the Maid of Norway to Scotland upon the death of Alexander III. By a poetical anachronism, he is here placed in a later era. He was a man of much learning, chiefly acquired in foreign countries. He wrote a commentary upon Aristotle, printed in Venice in 1493; and several treatises upon natural philosophy from which he appears to have been addicted to the abstract studies of judicial astrology, alchymy, physiognomy, and chronancy. Hence he passed among his contemporaries as a skilful magician. Dempster informs us, that he remembered to have heard in his youth, that the magic books of Michael Scott were still in existence, but could not be opened without danger, on account of the malignant fiends who were there invoked. Dempsteri Historia Ecclesiastica, 1637, lib. xii. p. 495. Lesly characterizes Michael Scott, as singularis philosophia, astronomia, ac medicina laude pristans; docetaber pristimos magiae recessus indagasse.” Dante also mentions him as a renowned wizard:

Quell altro chi ne’ stanchi o costi poco
Michele Scoeto fu, chi veramente
Delle magiche frode seppe il gioco.

Divina Comedia, Canto xxviii.

A personage, thus spoken of by biographers and historians, loses little of his mystical fame in vulgar tradition. Accordingly, the memory of Sir Michael Scott survives in many a legend; and in the south of Scotland, any work of great labour and antiquity, is ascribed, either to the agency of Auld Michael of Sir William Wallace, or of the devil. Tradition varies concerning the place of his burial: some contend for Holme Cemetery, in Cumberland; others for Melrose abbey. But I agree, that his books of magic were interred in his grave, preserved in the convent where he died. Satchells, wishing to give some authority for his account of the origin of the name Scott, pretends that, in 1629, he chanced to be at Burgh and Bowness, in Cumberland, where a person, named Lancelot Scott, showed him an extract from Michael Scott’s works, containing that story.
NOTES TO CANTO SECOND.

"He said the book which he gave me:
Was of Sir Michael's Scot's historic;
Which history was never yet read through,
Nor never will, for no man dare it do.
Young scholars have picked out something
From the contents, that dare not read within.
He carried me along the castle then,
And shewed his written book hanging on an iron pin.
His writing pen did seem to me to be
Of hardened metal, like steel, or accumie;
The volume of it did seem so large to me,
As the book of Martyrs and Turk's historic.
Then in the church he let me see
A stone where Mr. Michael Scott did lie;
I asked at him bow that could appear,
Mr. Michael had been dead above five hundred year?
He shew'd me none dare bury under that stone,
More than he had been dead a few years agone:
For Mr. Michael's name does terrifie each one."

History of the Right Honourable name of Scot.

Note XII.
--- Salamanca's cave.—P. 35.

Spain, from the relics, doubtless, of Arabian learning and superstition, was accounted a favourite residence of magicians. Pope Sylvester, who actually imported from Spain the use of the Arabian numerals, was supposed to have learned there the magic, for which he was stigmatized by the ignorance of his age.—Williams of Malmesbury, lib. ii. cap. 10. There were public schools, where magic, or rather the sciences supposed to involve its mysteries, were regularly taught, at Toledo, Seville, and Salamanca. In the latter city, they were held in a deep cavern; the mouth of which was walled up by Queen Isabella, wife of King Ferdinand.—D'Autun on Learned Incredulity, p. 45. These Spanish schools of magic are celebrated also by the Italian poets of romance:
NOTES TO CANTO SECOND.

Questo citta di Tolletto solea
Tenere studio di Negromanzia,
Quivi di magica arte si leggea
Pubblicamente, e di Peromanzia;
E molti Geomanti sempre avea
E sperimenti assai d' Tetremanzia
E d' altre false opinioni di scioeci
Come e fatture, o spesso batter gli oechi.

Il Morgante Maggiore, Canto XXV.

The celebrated magician Maugis, cousin to Rinaldo talban, called by Ariosto, Malagigi, studied the black Toledo, as we learn from L'Histoire de Maugis D'A.
He even held a professor's chair in the necromantic ur for so I interpret the passage, "qu'en tous les sept arcs d' '\nment, des charmes et conjurations il n'y avait meilleur \nlui; et en tel renom qu'on le laissoit en chaise, et l'ap \nmaistre Maugis." This Salamanca Dondaniel is said \nbeen founded by Hercules. If the classic reader inquire \nHercules himself learned magic, he may consult "Le \nprocesses du noble et vaillant Hercule," where he will le \nthe fable of his aiding Atlas to support the heavens, or \nthe said Atlas having taught Hercules, the noble knig \nthe seven liberal sciences, and, in particular, that of ju \ntrology. Such, according to the idea of the middle ages, \nstyles, "maximus quae docuit Atlas."—In a romantic b \nRoderic, the last Gothic king of Spain, he is said to have \none of those enchanted caverns. It was situated bene\ncient tower near Toledo: and, when the iron gates whi \ned the entrance, were unfolded, there rushed forth so d \nwhirlwind, that hitherto no one bad dared to penetra \n recesses. But Roderic, threatened with an invasion \nMoors, resolved to enter the cavern, where he expect \nsome prophetic intimation of the event of the war. \ningly, his train being furnished with torches so artific \posed, that the tempest could not extinguish them, \nwith great difficulty penetrated into a square ball, in
NOTES TO CANTO SECOND.

With Arabian characters. In the midst stood a colossal of brass, representing a Saracen wielding a Moorish with which it discharged furious blows on all sides, and thus to excite the tempest which raged around. Be- jured by Roderic, it ceased from striking, until he read, ed on the right hand, “Wretched monarch, for thy evil come hither;” on the left hand, “Thou shalt be disposed a strange people;” on one shoulder, “I invoke the sen- ur;” on the other, “I do mine office.” When the king deciphered these ominous inscriptions, the statue returned exercise, the tempest commenced anew, and Roderic re- mour over the predicted evils which approached him. He caused the gates of the cavern to be locked and adored; but, in the course of the night, the tower fell a tremendous noise, and under its ruins concealed for an entrance to the mystic cavern. The conquest of Spain Saracens, and the death of the unfortunate Don Roderic, and the prophecy of the brazen statue. Historia verdadera y Don Rodrigo por el sabio Alcayde Abulcainim, traducida a lengua Arabiga por Miguel de Luna, 1854, cap. vi.

Note XIII.

The bells would ring in Notre Dame.—P. 35.

rem tam negligentem?” says Tyrwhitt, of his pri- or Speght; who, in his commentary on Chaucer, had, as trivial and fabulous, the story of Wade and his laingelot, to the great prejudice of posterity; the memo- ried hero, and the boat, being now entirely lost. That fu- ntiquaries may lay no such omission to my charge, I have one or two of the most current traditions concerning Mi- Scott. He was chosen, it is said, to go upon an embassy, ain from the king of France satisfaction for certain pi- remedied by his subjects upon those of Scotland. Instead sparing a new equipage and splendid retinue, the ambas- retreated to his study, opened his book, and evolved a in the shape of a huge black horse, mounted upon his and forced him to fly through the air towards France.
As they crossed the sea, the devil insidiously asked his rider, 'What it was that the old women of Scotland muttered at bedtime? A less experienced wizard might have answered, that it was the Pater Noster, which would have licensed the devil to precipitate him from his back. But Michael sternly replied, "What is that to thee? Mount, Diabolus, and fly!" When he arrived at Paris, he tied his horse to the gate of the palace, entered and boldly delivered his message. An ambassador, with so little of the pomp and circumstance of diplomacy, was not received with much respect, and the king was about to return a contemptuous refusal to his demand, when Michael besought him to suspend his resolution till he had seen his horse stamp three times. The first stamp shook every steeple in Paris, and caused all the bells to ring; the second threw down three of the towers of the palace; and the infernal steed had lifted his hoof to give the third stamp, when the king rather chose to dismiss Michael, with the most ample concessions, than to stand to the probable consequences. Another time, it is said, that, when residing at the tower of Oakwood, upon the Ettrick, about three miles above Selkirk, he heard of the fame of a sorceress, called the witch of Falsehope, who lived on the opposite side of the river. Michael went one morning to put her skill to the test, but was disappointed by her denying positively any knowledge of the necromantic art.

In his discourse with her, he laid his wand inadvertently on the table, which the hag observing, suddenly snatched it up, and struck him with it. Feeling the force of the charm, he rushed out of the house; but, as it had conferred the external appearance of a hare, his servant, who waited without, hailed upon the discomfited wizard his own greyhounds, and pursued him so closely, that, in order to obtain a moment's breathing to reverse the charm, Michael, after a very fatiguing course, was fain to take refuge in his own jaw-hole (angler, common sewer.) In order to revenge himself of the witch of Falsehope, Michael, one morning in the ensuing harvest, went to the hill above the house with his dogs, and sent down his servant to ask a bit of bread from the good-wife for his gray-bonds, with instructions what to do if he met with a denial. Accordingly, when the witch had refused the boon with contemnently, the servant, as his master had directed, laid above the door a paper, which he had given him, containing, amongst many cabalistical words, the well-known rhyme,—

Maister Michael Scot's man
Sought meat, and got nane.

Immediately the good old woman, instead of pursuing her domestic occupation, which was baking bread for the reapers, began to dance round the fire, repeating the rhyme, and continued this exercise till her husband sent the reapers to the house, one after another, to see what had delayed their provision; but the charm caught each as they entered, and losing all idea of returning, they joined in the dance and chorus. At length the old man himself went to the house; but as his wife's frolic with Mr. Michael, whom he had seen on the hill, made him a little cautious, he contented himself with looking in at the window, and saw the reapers at their involuntary exercise, dragging his wife, now completely exhausted, sometimes round, and sometimes through the fire, which was, as usual, in the midst of the house. Instead of entering, he saddled a horse, and rode up the hill, to humble himself before Michael, and beg a cessation of the spell; which the good-natured warlock immediately granted, directing him to enter the house backwards, and, with his left hand, take the spell from above the door; which accordingly ended the supernatural dance. This tale was told less particularly in former editions, and I have been censured for inaccuracy in doing so.—A similar charm occurs in Huon de Bourdeaux, and in the Ingenious Oriental tale, called the Caleph Vathek.

Notwithstanding his victory over the witch of Falsehope, Michael Scott, like his predecessor Merlin, fell at last a victim to female art. His wife, or concubine, elicited from him the secret, that his art could ward off any danger except the poisonous qualities of broth, made of the flesh of a breamworm. Such
NOTES TO CANTO SECOND.

accordingly administered to the wizard, who died in ance of eating it; surviving, however, long enough to ath his treacherous confidante.

Note XIV.

The words, that left Eildon Hills in three,

And bridled the Tweed with a curb of stone.—P. 35.

chael Scott was, once upon a time, much embarrassed by rit, for whom he was under the necessity of finding cont employment. He commanded him to build a cauld, or a-head, across the Tweed at Kelso; it was accomplished in a night and still does honour to the infernal architect. Mi-ael next ordered, that Eildon hill, which was then a uniform me, should be divided into three. Another night was suffiient to part its summits into the three picturesque peaks which it now bears. At length the enchanter conquered this indesatigible demon, by employing him in the hopeless and endless task of making ropes out of sea-sand.

Note XV.

That lamp shall burn unquenchably.—P. 37.

Baptista Porta, and other authors who treat of natural mag-talk much of eternal lamps, pretended to have been found bu-ing in ancient sepulchres. Fortunius Licetus investigates subject in a treatise, De Lucernis antiquorum reconditis, ished at Venice, 1621. One of these perpetual lamps is said have been discovered in the tomb of Tulliola, the dau-of Cicero. The wick was supposed to be composed of es. Kircher enumerates three different receipts for structing such lamps; and wisely concludes, that the ts nevertheless impossible.—Mundus Subterraneus, p. 72.
imputes the fabrication of such lights to magical skil questiones Magicae, P. 58. In a very rare romance “treateth of the lyfe of Virgillus, and of his deth a marvayles that he dyd in his lyftime, by wyche-ygramancye, through the holpe of the devyls of on is made of a very extraordinary process, in these mystical lamps was employed. It seems that Virgil, as he advanced in years, became desirous of renovating his youth by his magical art. For this purpose he constructed a solitary tower, having only one narrow portal, in which he placed twenty-four copper figures, armed with iron sallas, twelve on each side of the porch. These enchanted statues struck with their sallas incessantly, and rendered all entrance impossible, unless when Virgil touched the spring, which stopped their motion. To this tower he repaired privately, attended by one trusty servant, to whom he communicated the secret of the entrance, and hither they conveyed all the magician’s treasure. “Then sayde Virgilius, my dere beloved frende, and he that I above alle men truste and knowe mooste of my secret;” and then he led the man into a cellar, where he made a seuer lamp at all seasons burnynge. And then sayd Virgilius to the man, “Se you the barrel that standeth here?” and he sayd yea: “Therein must you put me: fyrste ye must sse me, and hewe me smalle to pieces, and cut my hed in lill pieces, and salute the heed under in the bottom, and then the pieces there after, and my herte in the myddel, and then set the barrel under the lampe, that nyghte and day the fat therin may droppe and leake; and ye shall ix dayes long, ones in the day, full the lampe, and sayle nat. And when all this is done, then shall I be remned, and made yonge agen.” At this extraordinary proposal, the confidante was sore abashed, and made some scruple of obeying his master’s commands. At length, however, he complied, and Virgil was slain, pickled, and barrelled up, in all respects according to his own direction. The servant then left the tower, taking care to put the copper thrashers in motion at his departure. He continued daily to visit the tower, with the same precaution. Meanwhile, the emperor, with whom Virgil was a great favourite, missed him from the court; and demanded of his servant where he was. The domestic pretended ignorance, till the emperor threatened him with death, when at length he conveyed him to the enchanted tower. The same threat extorted a discovery of the mode of stopping the statues from wielding their sallas. “And then the emperor...
entered into the castle with all his folke, and soughite in every corner after Virgilius; and at last they soughte so longe, that they came into the seller, where they sawe the lampe hang over the barrell, where Virgilius lay in deed. Then asked the emperour the man, who had made hym so herdy to put his mayster Virgilius so to dethe; and the man answered no worde to the emperour. And then the emperour, with great anger, drewe out his sworde, and slew he there Virgilius’ man. And when all this was done, then sawe the emperour, and all his folke, a naked child in tyme remanyng about the barrell, saynge these wordes, ‘cursed be the tyme that ye ever came here!” And with those words vanished the child awaye, and was never seen ageyn; and thus abyd Virgilius in the barrell deed.” Virg. bl. let. printed at Antwerp, by John Doesborcke. This curious volume is in the valuable library of Mr. Douce; and is supposed to be a translation from the French, printed in Flanders for the English market. See Goujet Biblioth. Franc. ix. 225. Catalogue de la Bibliothèque Nationale, Tom. II. p. 5. De Bure, No. 3857.

Note XVI.

His thought, as he took it, the dead man frowned.—P. 36.

William of Deloraine might be strengthened in this belief by the well-known story of the Cid Ruy Diaz. When the body of that famous Christian champion was sitting in state by the high altar of the cathedral church of Toledo, where it remained for ten years, a certain malicious Jew attempted to pull him by the beard; but he had no sooner touched his formidable whiskers, than the corpse started up, and half unsheathed his sword. The Israelite fled; and so permanent was the effect of his terror, that he became a Christian. F. wood’s Hierarchie, p. 480, quoted from Sebastian Cobarrus, croos.

Note XVII.

The baron’s Dwarf his courser held.—P. 45.

The idea of Lord Cranston’s Goblin Page, is w being called Gilpin Horner, who appeared, and made some say, at a farm-house among the Border-mountains. A gentleman of that country has noted down the following particular occurrences concerning his appearance.

"The only certain, at least most probable account, that ever heard of Gilpin Horner, was from an old man, of the name of Anderson, who was born, and lived all his life, at Tod-shallhill, in Easkdale-muir, the place where Gilpin appeared as staid for some time. He said there were two men, late in an evening, when it was growing dark, employed in fastening the horses upon the utmost part of their ground, (that is, tying their forefeet together, to hinder them from traveling far in the night,) when they heard a voice, at some distance, crying, 'tint! tint! tint!' One of the men, named lofist, called out, 'What de'll has tint you? Come here.' Immediately a creature, of something like a human form, ap-ppeared. It was surprisingly little, distorted in features, and disshapen in limbs. As soon as the two men could see it plainly, they ran home in a fright, imagining they had met with some goblin. By the way, Moffat fell, and it run over him, and was home at the house as soon as either of them, and staid there a long time; but I cannot say how long. It was real flesh and blood, and ate and drank, was fond of reem, and, when it could get at it, would destroy a great meal. It seemed a mischievous creature; and any of the children whom it could master, it would beat and scratch without mercy. It was once abusing a child belonging to the same Moffat, who had been so frightened by its first appearance; and he, in a passion, struck it so violent a blow upon the side of the head, that it tumbled upon the ground:
so it was not stunned; for it set up its head directly, and exclaimed, 'Ah, hah. Will o' Moffat, you strike sair?' (viz. sore.)
After it had staid there long, one evening, when the women were milking the cows in the loan, it was playing among the

* Tint signifies lost.
children near by them, when suddenly they heard a loud shriek; a voice cry, three times, 'Gilpin Horner.' It started, and 'That is me, I must away.' and instantly disappeared, and was never heard of more. Old Anderson did not remember it, but said he had often heard his father, and other old men, in the place who were there at the time, speak about it; and in my younger years I have often heard it mentioned, and never met with any who had the remotest doubt as to the truth of the story; although, I must own, I cannot help thinking there must be some misrepresentation in it."—To this account, I have to add the following particulars from the most respectable authority. Besides constantly repeating the word tint! tint! Gilpin Horner was often heard to call upon Peter Bertram, or Be-teram, as he pronounced the word: and when the shrill voice called Gilpin Horner, he immediately acknowledged it was the summons of the said Peter Bertram; who seems therefore to have been the devil, who had tint, or lost the little imp. As much has been objected to Gilpin Horner on account of his being supposed rather a device of the author than a popular superstition, I can only say, that no legend which I ever heard seemed to be more universally credited, and that many persons of very good rank and considerable information are well known to repose absolute faith in the tradition.

Note XVIII.

But the Ladye of Branksome gathered a band,

Of the best that would ride at her command.—P. 45.

"Upon 25th June, 1557, Dame Janet Beatoune, Lady Buccleuch, and a great number of the name of Scott, delaitit (accused) for coming to the kirk of St. Mary of the Lowes, to the number of two hundred persons bobin in feire of weire (arrayed in armour,) and breaking open the doors of the said kirk, in order to apprehend the laird of Cranstoune for his destruction." On the 20th July, a warrant from the queen is presented, discharging the justice to proceed against the Lady Buccleuch while new calling. Abridgment of Books of Adjourned in Advocates' Library.—The following proceedings upon this case
NOTES TO CANTO SECOND.

appear on the record of the Court of Justiciary. On the 25th of June, 1557, Robert Scott, in Bowhill parish, priest of the kirk of St. Mary's, accused of the convocation of the Queen's Reges, to the number of 200 persons, in warlike array, with jacks, helmets, and other weapons, and marching to the chapel of St. Mary of the Lowes, for the slaughter of Sir Peter Cranstoun, out of ancient feud and malice prepense, and of breaking the doors of the said kirk, is repleded by the archbishop of Glasgow. The bail given by Robert Scott of Allenbaugh, Adam Scott of Burnefute, Robert Scott in Howfurde, Walter Scott in Todshawbaugh, Walter Scott younger of Synton, Thomas Scott of Hayning, Robert Scott, William Scott, and James Scott, brothers of the said Walter Scott, Walter Scott in the Woll, and Walter Scott, son of William Scott of Harden, and James Wemyss in Eckford, all accused of the same crime, is declared to be forfeited. On the same day, Walter Scott of Synton, and Walter Chisholme of Chisholme, and Walter Scott of Harden, became bound, jointly and severally, that Sir Peter Cranstoun, and his kindred and servants, should receive no injury from them in future. At the same time, Patrick Murray of Fallohill, Alexander Stuart, uncle to the laird of Trakwhare, John Murray of Newhall, John Fairriye, residing in Selkirk, George Tait, younger of Pirn, John Pennycuke, of Pennycuke, James Ramsay of Cokpen, the laird of Faswyde, and the laird of Henderstoune, were all severally fined for not attending as jurors; being probably either in alliance with the accused parties, or dreading their vengeance. Upon the 20th of July following, Scott of Synton, Chisholme of Chisholme, Scott of Harden, Scott of Howpaslie, Scott of Burnefute, with many others, are ordered to appear at next calling, under the pains of treason. But no farther procedure seems to have taken place. It is said, that, upon this rising, the kirk of St. Mary was burned by the Scotts.
NOTES TO CANTO THIRD.

Note I.

When, dancing in the sunny beam,
He marked the crane on the baron’s crest.—P. 50.

The crest of the Cranstouns, in allusion to their name, is a crane dormant, holding a stone in his foot, with an emphatic Border motto, Thou shalt want ere I want.

Note II.

Much he marv’led a knight of pride,
Like a book-bosomed priest should ride.—P. 52.

At Unthank, two miles N. E. from the church, (of Ewes,) there are the ruins of a chapel for divine service, in time of popery. There is a tradition, that friars were wont to come from Melrose, or Jedburgh, to baptize and marry in this parish; and from being in use to carry the mass-book in their bosoms, they were called, by the inhabitants, Book-a-bosomes. There is a man yet alive, who knew old men who had been baptized by these book-a-bosomes, and who says one of them, called Hair, used this parish for a very long time.”—Account of Parish of Ewes, apud Macfarlane’s MSS.

Note III.

It had much of glamour might.—P. 53.

Glamour, in the legends of Scottish superstition, means the magic power of imposing on the eye-sight of the spectators, so that the appearance of an object shall be totally different from the reality. The transformation of Michael Scott by the witch of Falsehope, already mentioned, was a genuine operation of glamour. To a similar charm the ballad of Johnny Fa’imputes the fascination of the lovely Counters, who eloped with that gipsy leader:
was formerly used even in war. In 1381, when the Duke ajou lay before a strong castle, upon the coast of Naples, a omancer offered to “make the ayre so thycke, that they in shal thyneke that there is a great bridge on the see, (by th the castle was surrounded,) for ten men to go a front;
when they within the castle se this bridge, they will be so orde, that they shall yeilde them to your mercy. The Duke anded— Fayre Master, on this bridge that ye speke of, our people assuredly go thereon to the castell to assaye Syr, quod the enchantour, I dare not assure you that; for ny that passeth on the bridge make the signe of the crosse ym, all shall go to noughte, and they that be on the bridge fall into the see. Then the Duke began to laugh; and a sin of young knightes, that were thare present, said, Syr, odsake, let the mayster essay his cunning; we shal leve ing of any signe of the crosse on us for that tyume.” The of Savoy, shortly after, entered the tent, and recognised enchanter, the same person who had put the castle into power of Sir Charles de la Payx, who then held it, by uding the garrison of the Queen of Naples, through ical deception, that the sea was coming over the walls.
sage avowed the feat, and added, that he was the man in world most dreaded by Sir Charles de la Payx. “By my , quod the Earle of Savoy, ye say well; and I will that Syr ries de la Payx shall know that he hath gret wronge to you. But I shall assure him of you; for ye shall never do auntment to deceyve hym, nor yet none other. I wolde that in tyme to come we shulde be reproached that in gh an enterprise as we be in, wherein there be so many knyghtes and squyers assembled, that we shulde do any g be enchauntment, nor that we shulde wyn our enemies ch crafte. Than he called to hym a servaunt, and sayd, and get a hangman, and let hym stryke of this mayster’s without delay; and as sone as the Earle had commanded it, incontinent it was done, for his heed was stry
The art of glamour, or other fascination, was ancit principal part of the skill of the jongleur, or juggler, tricks formed much of the amusement of a Gothic
Some instances of this art may be found in the M's of the Scottish Border, Vol. III. p. 113. In a stran gorical poem, called the Houlat, written by a depm the house of Douglas, about 1452-3, the jay, in an as of birds, plays the part of the juggler. His feats of g are thus described:

He gart them see, as it semyt, in samyn howe,
Hunting at herdis in holts so hair;
Soune sailand on the see schippis of toure,
Bernis battaland on burd brim as a bare;
He coude carye the coup of the kingis des,
Syne leve in the stede,
Bot a black bunwede;
He coude of a henis hed,
Make a man mes.

He gart the Emproure trow, and trewlye behal:
That the cornersiik, the plundare at hand,
Had poynit all his pris hors in a poynd fald,
Because thai ete of the corn in the kirkland
He could wairk winderis, quhat way that he wa
Mak a gray gus a gold garland,
A lang spere of a bittle for a berne bald,
Nobilis of nutschelles, and silver of sand.

Thus joukit with juxters the janglane ja,
Fair ladyes in ringsis,
Knychtis in caralyngis,
Bayth dansis and singis,
It semyt as so.
NOTES TO CANTO THIRD.

Note IV.

Now, if you ask who gave the stroke,
I cannot tell, so mort I thrive;
It was not given by man alive.—P. 54.

Dr. Henry More, in a letter prefixed to Glanville’s Saducismus riumpHatus, mentions a similar phenomenon.

I remember an old gentleman in the country, of my acquaintance, an excellent Justice of Peace, and a piece of a mathematician; but what kind of a philosopher he was, you may understand from a rhyme of his own making, which he recommended to me at my taking horse in his yard, which rhyme is this:

Ens is nothing till sense find out:
Sense ends in nothing, so naught goes about.

The rhyme of his was so rapturous to himself, that on the wing of the second verse, the old man turned himself about his toe as nimbly as one may observe a dry leaf whisked in the corner of an orchard-walk by some little whirl.

With this philosopher I have had many discourses concerning the immortality of the soul and its distinction; when run him quite down by reason, he would but laugh at my say, this is logic. H. (calling me invited to the converse of my spirit, and therefore, so soon as his boots were off, and his shoes on, out he goes into the yard and next field, to find out the spirit that had given him this familiar clap on the back, but found none neither in the yard nor field next to it.

"But though he did feel this stroke, albeit he thought it afterwards (finding nothing came of it) a mere delusion; yet, not long before his death, it had more force with him than all the philosophical arguments I could use to him, though I could wind him and non-plus him as I pleased; but yet all my arguments, how solid soever, made no impression upon him; wherefore, after several reasonings of this nature, whereby I could prove to him the soul's distinction from the body, and its immortality, when nothing of such subtle considerations did any more execution on his mind than some lightning is said to do, though it melts the sword, on the fuzzy consistency of the scabbard.—Well, said I, father L., though none of these things move you, I have something still behind, and what yourself has acknowledged to me to be true, that may do the business:
—Do you remember the clap on your back when your servant was pulling off your boots in the hall? Assure yourself, said
I, father L., that goblin will be the first that will bid you welcome into the other world. Upon that his countenance changed most sensibly, and he was more confounded with this rubbing up his memory, than with all the rational or philosophical argumentation that I could produce."

Note V.

The running stream dissolved the spell.—P. 55.

It is a firm article of popular faith, that no enchantment can subsist in a living stream. Nay, if you can interpose a brook betwixt you and witches, spectres, or even fiends, you are in perfect safety. Burns's inimitable Tam o' Shanter turns entirely upon such a circumstance. The belief seems to be of antiquity. Drompton informs us, that certain Irish wizards could, by spells, convert earthen clods, or stones, into fat eggs, which they sold in the market; but which always re-assumed their proper form, when driven by the deceived purchaser across a running stream. But Brompton is severe on the Irish, for a very good reason. "Gens ista spurcissima non solvant decimas."—Chronicon Johannis Brompton apud decem Scriptores, p. 1076.

Note VI.

His buckler scarce in breadth a span,
No longer fence had he;
He never counted him a man,
Would strike below the knee.—P. 58.

Imitated from Dayton's account of Robin Hood and his followers.

A hundred valiant men had this brave Robin Hood,
Still ready at his call, that bowmen were right good;
All clad in Lincoln green, with caps of red and blue,
His fellow's winded horn not one of them but knew.
When setting to their lips their bugle shrill,
The warbling echoes waked from every dale and hill;
Their bauldries set with studs athwart their shoulders cast,
To which under their arms their sheafs were buckled fast,
A short sword at their belt, a buckler scarce a span,
Who struck below the knee not counted then a man.
All made of Spanish yew, their bows were wondrous strong,
They not an arrow drew, but was a clothyard long.
Of archery they had the very perfect craft,
With broad arrow, or but, or prick, or roving shaft.

To wound an antagonist in the thigh, or leg, was reckoned contrary to the law of arms. In a tilt betwixt Gawain Michael, an English squire, and Joachim Cathore, a Frenchman, "they met at the spear poyntes rudely: the French squyer justed right pleasantly; the Englishman ran too lowe, for he strak the Frenchman depe into the thygh. Wherwith the Erle of Buckingham was right sore displeased, and so were all the other lorde, and sayde how it was shamefully
NOTES TO CANTO THIRD.

done.” Froissart, vol. i. ch. 366.—Upon a similar occasion "the two knights came a fote ech against other rudeely, with their speares lowe couched, to stryke ech other within the foure quarters. Johan of Castle Morante strake the English squier on the brest in such wyse, that Sir Wylyam Fermestone stombled and bowed, for his fote a lyttle sayled him. He helde his speare lowe with both his handes, and coude nat amend it, and strake Sir Johan of the Castell-Morante in the thigbe, so that the speare went clene throughge, that the heed was sene a handfull on the other syde. And Syr Johan with the stroke reled, but he fell nat. Then the Englishhe knights and squyres were righte sore displeased, and sayde how it was a foule stroke. Syr Wylyam Fermestone excused himselfe, and sayde how he was sorie of that adventure, and howe that yf he had knowen that it shulde have bene so, he wolde never have begon it; sayenge how he coude nat amend it, by cause of glaunung of his fote by constraynt of the great stroke that Syr Johan of the Castell-Morante had given him.” Ibid. ch. 373.

Note VII.
And with a charm she stancht the blood.—P. 60.
See several charms for this purpose in Reginald Scott’s Discovery of Witchcraft, p. 273.

Tom Potts was but a serving man,
But yet he was a doctor good;
He bound his handkerchief on the wound,
And with some kinds of words he stancht the blood.

Pieces of ancient popular Poetry, Lond. 1791, p. 151.

Note VIII.
But she has ta’en the broken lance,
And washd it from the clotted gore,
And salved the splinter o’er and o’er.—P. 61.

Sir Kenelm Digby, in a discourse upon the cure by sympathye, pronounced at Montpellier, before an assembly of nobles and learned men, translated into English by R. White, gentleman, and published in 1658, gives us the following curious surgical case:

"Mr. James Howel (well known in France for his public works, and particularly for his Deudrologice, translated into French by Mons. Baudouin) coming by chance, as two of his best friends were fighting in duel, he did his endeavour to part them; and, putting himself between them, seized with his left hand, upon the hilt of the sword of one of the combatants, while, with his right hand, he laid hold of the blade of the other. They, being transported with fury one against the other, struggled to rid themselves of the hindrance their friend made, that they should not kill one another; and one of them roughly drawing the blade of his sword, cuts to the very bone the nerves and muscles of Mr. Howel's hand; and then the other disengaged his hilt, and gave a crosse blow on his adversary's head, which glanced towards his friend, who heaving up his sore hand to save the blow, he was wounded on the back of his hand, as he had been before within. It seems some strange constellation reigned then against him, that he should lose so much blood by parting two such dear friends, who, had they been themselves, would have hazarded both their lives to have preserved his: but this involuntary effusion of blood by them, prevented that which they should have drawn one from the other. For they, seeing Mr. Howel's face besmeared by blood, by heaving up his wounded hand, they both ran to embrace him; and, having searched his hurts, they bound up his hand with one of his garters, to close the veins which were cut, and bled abundantly. They brought him home, and sent for a surgeon. But this being heard at court, the king sent one of his own surgeons; for his majesty much affected the said Mr. Howel.

"It was my chance to be lodged hard by him; and four or five days after, as I was making myself ready, he came to my house, and prayed me to view his wounds; 'for I understand,' said he, 'that you have extraordinary remedies on such occasions, and my surgeons apprehend some fear that it may grow..."
to a gangrene, and so the hand must be cut off.' In effect, his countenance discovered that he was in much pain, which he said was insupportable, in regard of the extreme inflammation. I told him I would willingly serve him. But if haply he knew the manner how I would cure him without touching or seeing him, it may be he would not expose himself to my manner of curing, because he would think it, peradventure, either ineffectual or superstitious. He replied, 'The wonderful things which many have related unto me of your way of medicinment, makes me nothing doubt at all of its efficacy; and all that I have to say unto you, is comprehended in the Spanish proverb, Haga el milagro y hagalo Mahoma—Let the miracle be done, though Mahomet do it.'

'I asked him then for any thing that had the blood upon it; so he presently sent for his garter, wherewith his hand was first bound; and as I called for a basin of water, as if I would wash my hands, I took a handful of powder of vitriol, which I had in my study, and presently dissolved it. As soon as the bloody garter was brought me, I put it within the basin, observing in the interim, what Mr. Howel did, who stood talking with a gentleman in a corner of my chamber, not regarding at all what I was doing; but he started suddenly, as if he had found some strange alteration in himself. I asked him what he ailed? 'I know not what ailes me; but I finde that I feel no more pain. Methinks that a pleasing kinde of fresnesse, as it were a wet cold napkin, did spread over my hand, which hath taken away the inflammacion that tortured me before.' I replied, 'Since then that you feel already so good effect of my medicament, I advise you to cast away all your playsters; only keep the wound clean, and in a moderate temper betwixt heat and cold.' This was presently reported to the Duke of Buckingham, and a little after to the king, who were both very curious to know the circumstance of the businesse, which was, that after dinner I took the garter out of the water, and put it to dry before a great fire. It was scarce dry, but Mr. Howel's servant came running, that his master felt as much burning as ever he had done, if not more; for the heat was such as if he land were 'twixt coles of fire. I answered, although that had happened at present, yet he should find ease in a short time; for I knew the reason of this new accident, and would provide accordingly; for his master should be free from that inflammation, it may be before he could possibly return to him; but in case he found no ease, I wished him to come presently back again; if not, he might forbear coming. Thereupon he went; and at the instant I did put again the garter into the water, thereupon he found his master without any pain at all. To be brief, there was no sense of pain afterward; but within five or six dayes the wounds were cicatrized, and entirely healed."
NOTES TO CANTO THIRD.

Page 6.

The king (James VI.) obtained from Sir Kenelm the discovery of his secret, which he pretended had been taught him by a Carmelite friar, who had learned it in Armenie, or Persia. Let not the age of animal magnetism and metallic tractors smile at the sympathetic powder of Sir Kenelm Digby. Reginald Scott mentions the same mode of cure in these terms: "And that which is more strange...They can remedie anie stranger with that verie sword wherewith they are wounded. Yea, and that which is beyond all admiration, if they stroke the sword upward with their fingers, the partie shall feele no pain, whereas, if they draw their fingers downwards, thereupon the partie wounded shall feele intolerable pain." I presume that the success ascribed to the sympathetic mode of treatment might arise from the pains bestowed in washing the wound, and excluding the air, thus bringing on a cure by the first intention. It is introduced by Dryden in the Enchanted Island, a (very unnecessary) alteration of the Tempest:

Ariel. Anoint the sword which pirection him with this Weapon-salve, and wrap it close from air,
Till I have time to visit him again.—Act v, sc. 2.

Again, in scene 4th, Miranda enters with Hippolito's sword wrapped up:
NOTES TO CANTO THIRD.

Hip. O my wound pains me. [She unwraps the sword.
Mir. I am come to ease you.

Hip. Alas, I feel the cold air come to me;
My wound shoots worse than ever.
Mir. Does it still grieve you?

[She wipes and anoints the sword.

Hip. Now, methinks, there's something laid just upon it.
Mir. Do you find no ease?

Hip. Yes, yes; upon the sudden all this pain
Is leaving me. Sweet heaven, how I am eased!

Note IX.

On Pechenryl grow a bale of fire,
And three are kindling on Priesthaughswire.—P. 63.

The Border beacons, from their number and position, formed a sort of telegraphic communication with Edinburgh.—The act of parliament 1455, c. 48. directs, that one bale or faggot shall be warning of the approach of the English in any maner; two bales, that they are coming indeed; four bales, blazing beside each other, that the enemy are in great force. "The same talkenings to be watched and made at Eggerhope (Eggerstane) Castell, fra they se the fire of Hume, that they fire right swa. And in like manner on Sowtra Edge, all se the fire of Eggershope Castell, and mak talkening in like manner:
And then may all Louthiane be warned, and in special the Castell of Edinburgh; and their four fires to be made in like manner, that they in Fife, and fra Striveling east, and the east part of Louthiane, and to Dunbar, all may se them, and come to the defense of the realm." These beacons (at least in letter times) were "a long and strong tree set up, with a long iron pole across the head of it and an iron brander fixed on a stalk in the middle of it, for holding a tar barrel."—Stevenson's History, Vol. II. p. 701.

Note X.

Our kin, and clan, and friends, to rate.—P. 63.

The speed with which the Borderers collected great bodies of horse, may be judged of from the following extract, when the subject of the rising was much less important than that supposed in the romance. It is taken from Carey's Memoirs: "Upon the death of the old Lord Scroop, the queen gave the west wardenry to his son, that had married my sister. He having received that office, came to me with great earnestness, and desired me to be his deputy, offering me that I should live with him in his house; that he would allow me half a dozen men, and as many horses, to be kept at his charge; and his fee being 1000 marks yearly, he would part it with me, and I should have the half. This noble offer I accepted of, and went with him to Carlisle; where I was no sooner come, but I entered into my office. We had a stirring time of it; and few days past over my head but I was on horseback, either to prevent mischief, or take malefactors, and to bring the Border in better quiet than it had been in times past." One memorable thing, of God's mercy shewed unto me, was such as I have good cause still to remember it.

"I had private intelligence given me, that there were two Scottish men, that had killed a churchman in Scotland, and were by one of the Grames relieved. This Grame dwelt within five miles of Carlisle. He had a pretty house, and close by it a strong tower, for his own defence in time of need.—About two o'clock in the morning, I took horse in Carlisle, and not above twenty-five in company, thinking to surprise the house on a sudden. Before I could surround the house, the two Scots were gotten in the strong tower, and I could see a boy riding from the house as fast as his horse could carry him; I little suspected what it meant. But Thomas Carleton came to me presently, and told me, that if I did not presently prevent it, both myself and all my company would be either slain or taken prisoners. It was strange to me to hear this language. He then said to me, 'Do you see that boy that rideth away so fast? He will be in Scotland within this half hour; and he is gone to let them know that you are here, and to what end you are come, and the small number you have with you; and that if they will make haste, on a sudden they may surprise us, and do with us what they please.' Hereupon we took advice what was best to be done. We sent notice presently to all parts to raise the country, and to come to us with all the speed they could, and withal we sent to Carlisle to raise the townsmen; for without the foot we could do no good against the tower. There we staid some hours, expecting more company; and within short time after the country came in on all sides, so that we were quickly between three and four hundred horses; and, after some longer stay, the foot of Carlisle came to us, to the number of three or four hundred men: whom we presently set to work, to get up to the top of the tower, and to uncover the roof; and then some twenty of them to fall down together, and by that means to win the tower.—The Scots, seeing their present danger, offered to parley, and yielded themselves to my mercy. They had no sooner opened the iron gate, and yielded themselves my prisoners, but we might see 400 horses within a quarter of a mile coming to their rescue, and to surprize me and my small company; but of a sudden they stayed, and stood at gate. Then had I more to do than ever; for all our Borderers came crying, with full mouths, 'Sir, give us leave to set upon them; for these are they that have killed our fathers, our brothers, and uncles, and our cousins; and they are coming, thinking to surprise you, upon weak grass mags, such as they could get on a sudden; and God hath put them into your hands, that we may take revenge of them for much blood that they have spilt of ours.' I desired they would be patient a while, and bethought myself, if I should give them their will, there would be few or none of the Scots that would escape unkill'd (there were so many deadly feuds among them;) and therefore I resolved with myself to give them a fair answer, but not to give them their desire. So I told them, that if I were not there myself, they might then do what pleased themselves; but being present, if I should give them leave, the blood that should be spilt that day would lie very hard upon my conscience. And therefore I desired them, for my sake, to forbear; and, if the Scots did not presently make away with all the speed they could, upon my sending to them they should then have their wills to do what they pleased. They were ill satisfied with my answer, but durst not disobey. set with speed to the Scots, and bade them pack away with all the speed they could; for if they stayed the messenger's rear, they should few of them return to their own home. They made no stay; but they were turned homewards before the messenger had made an end of his message. Thus, by God's mercy, I escaped a great danger; and, by my means, there were a great many men's lives saved that day."
NOTES TO CANTO THIRD.

Note XI.

On many a cairn's gray pyramid,
Where urns of mighty chiefs lie hid.—P. 64.

The cairns, or piles of loose stones, which crown the summit of most of our Scottish hills, and are found in other remarkable situations, seem usually, though not universally, to have been sepulchral monuments. Six flat stones are commonly found in the centre, forming a cavity of greater or smaller dimensions, in which an urn is often placed. The author is possessed of one, discovered beneath an immense cairn at Roughlee, in Liddlesdale. It is of the most barbarous construction; the middle of the substance alone having been subjected to the fire, over which, when hardened, the artist had laid an inner and outer coat of unbaked clay, etched with some very rude ornaments; his skill apparently being inadequate to baking the vase, when completely finished. The contents were bones and ashes, and a quantity of beads made of coal. This seems to have been a barbarous imitation of the Roman fashion of sepulture.
NOTES TO CANTO FOURTH.

Note I.
Great Dundee.—P. 70.
The Viscount of Dundee, slain in the battle of Killiecrankie.

Note II.
For pathless march, and mountain cell,
The peasant left his lowly shed.—P. 70.

The morasses were the usual refuge of the Border herds- men, on the approach of an English army.—(Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border, Vol. I. p. 49.) Caves, hewed in the most dan- gerous and inaccessible places, also afforded an occasional re- treat. Such caverns may be seen in the precipitous banks of the Teviot at Sunlaws, upon the Ale at Ancram, upon the Jed at Hundalee, and in many other places upon the Border. The banks of the Eeke, at Gorton and Hawthorneden, are hollowed into similar recesses. But even these dreary dens were not always secure places of concealment. "In the way as we came, not far from this place, (Long Nidry,) George Ferres, a gentle- man of my Lord Protector's...happened upon a cave in the grounde, the mouth whereof was so worne with the fresh printe of steps, that he seemed to be certayne theare wear sum folke within; and gone done to trie, he was readily receyved with a hakebut or two. He left them not yet, till he had know- en wheather thei wold be content to yeld and come out; whiche they fondly refusing, he went to my lorde's grace, and upon utterance of the thynge, got licence to deale with them as he coulde, and so returned to them, with a shorre or two of pione- ers. Three ventes had their cave, that we wear ware of, whereof he first stopt up on; another he fill'd full of strawe, and set it a fyre, whereat they within cast water upon; we
NOTES TO CANTO FOURTH.

so we maynteyned without, that the syer prevayled, el within sayn to get them belyke into another parier-levis we (for I bapyd to be with hym) to stop the same hereby we should eyther smoother them, or fynd out rates, if they hadde any moe: as this was done at ano-me, about xii score of, we moughte see the smute of their to come out: the which continued with so great a force, long a while, that we could not but thinke they must get them out, or smoother within: and forasmuch as we not that they syd the tone, we thought it for certain sar sure of lie toother.—Pater's Account of Somerset's ition into Scotland, spud Dabyll's Fragments.

Note III.

Southern ravage.—P. 70.

n the following fragment of a letter from the Earl of imberland to King Henry VIII. preserved among the MSS. Calig. B. vii. 173, the reader may estimate the of the dreadful war which was occasionally waged up-Borders, sharpened by mutual cruelties, and the person-ed of the wardens, or leaders.

e Scottish barons, says the earl, had threatened to come "three miles of my pore house of Werkworth, where I d giff me light to put on my cloths at mydnyght; and he said Mark Carr said their opynly, that, seynyng they governour on the marches of Scotland, as well as they Ingland, he shulde kepe your highnes instructions, gyf-to your garyson, for making of any day-forney; for he s friends wolde burne enough on the nyght, letyng your dill here defyne a notable acte at theyre pleasures. Up-liche in your highnes' name, I comandet dewe watche kepte on your marches, for comyng in of any Scotts.— eles, upon Thursday at night last, came thryt light nent into a litl village of myne, called Whitell, having st sex houses, lyng toward Ryddissal, upon Shillboxall and ther wold have syred the said housses, but ther was s to get thera, and they forgat to bringe any wyth.
NOTES TO CANTO FOURTH.

theyme; and toke a wyf, being great with chylde, to towne, and said to hyr, Wher we can not gyve thel yet we shall doo this in spye of hym; and gyve he tall wounds upon the heid, and another in the right a dagger: wherappon the said wyf is deede, and in her bely is loste. Beseeching your most gracious reduce unto your gracious memory this wyful and murder, done within this your highnesse realme, not ing all the inhabitants theerabouts rose unto the said gave warnyng by becons into the countrey afor th yet the Scottsmen dyde escape. And upon certeyne t to my brother Clyfforthe and me, had by creadbul Scotland, this abominable act not only to be done t of the Mershe, but also the afor named persons of and consented to, as by appearance, by the Erle of I en Friday at night last, let ayp C of the best ho Glendaill, with a parte of your highnes' subjects of together with George Dowgias, whoo came into agayne, in the dawning of the day; but afor they they dyd mar the Earl of Murrell's provisions at Cot for they did not only burne the said town of Colding all the corne thereunto belonging, which is esteem st marke sterlind; but also burned twa townes ri ing thereunto, called Branerdergest and the Black foke xxiii persons, lx horse, with cc hed of ca
powe, as I am informed, hath not only been a su said Erle of Murrell's not coming to the Bordure a also, that none inlande man will adventure theyr a the marches. And as for the tax that shuld have be tyld for finding of the said lii hundred men, is utte
Upon which the king of Scotland departed from Edy Stirling, and as yet there doth remayn. And also I, vice of my brother Clyfforth, have devyseyd, that wth nyghts, Godde willing, Kelsey, in lyke case, shall with all the corne in the said town; and then they:
noo place to lye any garyson in nygh unto the Bord
as I shall atteigne further knowledge, I shall not f fry your highness, according to my most bounden dutie. And for this burnynge of Kelsey is devyseyd to be done secretly, by Tyndal and Ryddisdale. And thus the holy Trynte and  your most royal estate, with long lyf, and as much increase of honour as your most noble heart can desire. At Wernth, the xxiiid day of October." (1522.)

Note IV.

Watt Tinlinn.—P. 71.

This person was, in my younger days, the theme of many a fireside tale. He was a retainer of the Buccleuch family, and held for his Border service a small tower on the frontiers of Liddesdale. Watt was, by profession, a sutor, but, by inclination and practice, an archer and warrior. Upon one occasion the captain of Bewcastle, military governor of that wild district of Cumberland, is said to have made an incursion into Scotland, in which he was defeated and forced to fly. Watt Tinlinn pursued him closely through a dangerous morass: the captain, however, gained the firm ground; and seeing Tinlinn dismounted, and floundering in the bog, used these words of insult: "Sutor Watt, ye cannot sew your boots: the heels riesp and the seams rice."—"If I cannot sew,"—retorted Tinlinn, discharging a shaft, which nailed the captain's thigh to his saddle,—"If I cannot sew, I can yerk."

Note V.

Bilhope Stag.—P. 71.

There is an old rhyme, which thus celebrates the places in Liddesdale, remarkable for game:

Bilhope braes for bucks and raes,
And Carit haugh for swine,
And Tarras for the good bull-trout,
If he be ta'en in time.

* Riesp, creak.—Rive, tear.

† Yerk, to twitch, as shoemakers do, in securing the stitches of their work.
The bucks and roes, as well as the old swine, are now extinct; but the good bull-trout is still famous.

Note VI.

Of silver brooch and bracelet proud.—P. 71.

As the borderers were indifferent about the furniture of their habitations, so much exposed to be burnt and plundered, they were proportionally anxious to display splendour in decorating and ornamenting their females.—See Lecti de Moribus Latinos.

Note VII.

Belted Will Howard.—P. 72.

Lord William Howard, third son of Thomas, duke of Norfolk, succeeded to Naworth Castle, and a large domain annexed to it, in right of his wife Elizabeth, sister of George Lord Derer, who died without heirs male, in the 11th of Queen Elizabeth. By a poetical anachronism, he is introduced into the romance a few years earlier than he actually flourished. He was warden of the Western Marches; and, from the rigour with which he repressed the Border excesses, the name of Belted Will Howard is still famous in our traditions. In the castle of Naworth, his apartments, containing a bed-room, oratory, and library, are still shown. They impress us with an unsatisfying idea of the life of a lord warden of the marches. Three or four strong doors, separating these rooms from the rest of the castle, indicate apprehensions of treachery from his garrison; and the secret winding passages, through which he could privately descend into the guard-room, or even into the dungeons, imply the necessity of no small degree of secret superintendence on the part of the governor. As the ancient books and furniture have remained undisturbed, the venerable appearance of these apartments, and the armour scattered around the chamber, almost lead us to expect the arrival of the warden in person. Naworth Castle is situated near Brampton in Cumberland. Lord William Howard is an. ancestor of the Earls of Carlisle.
NOTES TO CANTO FOURTH.

Note VIII.

Lord Dacre.—P. 72.

The well-known name of Dacre is derived from the exploits of one of their ancestors at the siege of Acre, or Ptolemais, under Richard Coeur de Lion. There were two powerful branches of that name. The first family, called Lord Dacres of the South, held the castle of the same name, and are ancestors to the present Lord Dacre. The other family, descended from the same stock, were called Lord Dacres of the North, and were barons of Gilsland and Graystock. A chieftain of the latter branch was warden of the West Marches during the reign of Edward VI. He was a man of a hot and obstinate character, as appears from some particulars of Lord Surrey’s letter to Henry VIII., giving an account of his behaviour at the siege and storm of Jedburgh. It is printed in the Ministry of the Scottish Border, Appendix to the Introduction.

Note IX.

The German hagbut-men.—P. 72.

In the wars with Scotland, Henry VIII. and his successors employed numerous bands of mercenary troops. At the battle of Pinky, there were in the English army six hundred hackbutters on foot, and two hundred on horseback, composed chiefly of foreigners. On the 27th September, 1549, the Duke of Somerset, Lord protector, writes to the Lord Dacre, warden of the West Marches: “The Almains, in number two thousand, very valiant soldiers, shall be sent to you shortly from Newcastle, together with Sir Thomas Holcroft, and with the force of your wardenry, (which we would were advanced to the most strength of horsemen that might be,) shall make the attempt to Loughmaben, being of no such strength but that it may be skailed with ladders, whereof, beforehand, we would you caused secretly some number to be provided; or else undermined with the pyke-ax, and so taken: either to be kept for the king’s majesty, or otherwise to be defaced, and taken from the profits of the enemy. And in like manner the house of Carlaverock to be used.” Repeated mention occurs of this 1549.
Almaine, in the subsequent correspondence; and the enterprise seems finally to have been abandoned, from the difficulty of providing these strangers with the necessary "victuals and carriages in so poor a country as Dumfries-shire." History of Cumberland, vol. I. Introd. p. lxi. From the battle-pieces of the ancient Flemish painters, we learn, that the Low-Country and German soldiers marched to an assault with their right knees bared. And we may also observe, in such pictures, the extravagance to which they carried the fashion of ornamenting their dress with knots of ribband. This custom of the Germans is alluded to in the Mirror for Magistrates, p. 121.

Their pleated garments therewith well accord,
All jagde and frount, with divers colours deckt.

Note X.

His ready lances Thirstaine brave
Arrayed beneath a banner bright.—P. 73.

Sir John Scott of Thirstaine flourished in the reign of James V., and possessed the estates of Thirstaine, Gamescleuch, &c. lying upon the river of Ettrick, and extending to St. Mary's Loch, at the head of Yarrow. It appears, that when James had assembled his nobility, and their feudal followers, at Fala, with the purpose of invading England, and was, as is well known, disappointed by the obstinate refusal of his peers, the baron alone declared himself ready to follow the king wherever he should lead. In memory of his fidelity, James granted his family a charter of arms, entitling them to bear a border fleurs-de-luce, similar to the treasure in the royal arms, with bundle of spears for the crest; motto, Ready ay ready. The charter itself is printed by Nisbet; but his work being scarce, I insert the following accurate transcript from the original, in the possession of the Right Honourable Lord Napier, the representative of John of Thirstaine.

"JAMES REX.

"We James, be the grace of God, King of Scots, consi..."
NOTES TO CANTO FOURTH.

and the faith and gud servise of of right tryst friend John Scott of Thirlestane, quha cammand to our hoste at Soutraedge, with three score and ten launciers on horseback of his friends and followers, and beand willing to gang with ws into Eng- land, when all our nobles and others refusied, he was readdy to make allus our biddig; ffor the quhilik cause, It is our will, and we doe straettle command and charg our lion herald, and his deputys for the time beand, to give and to graunt to the said John Scott, ane Border of ffeuer de lisses about his coste of armes, sik as is on our royal banner, and aiso ane bundell of launces above his helmet, with thir words, Readdy ay Readdy, that he and all his aftercummers may bruik the samine as a pledge and taikien of our guid will and kyndnes for his true worthines; and thir our letters seen, ye see wayes failzie to doe. Given at Fsaill Muire, under our hand and privy cashet, the xxvii day of July, mc and xxxii seires. By the King's graces speciall ordinance. Jo. Arakine."

On the back of the charter, is written,

Note XI.

An aged knight, to danger steeld,
With many a moss-trooper came on;
And azure in a golden field,
The stars and crescent grace his shield,
Without the bend of Murdlestoun.—P 74.

The family of Harden are descended from a younger son of the laird of Buccleuch, who flourished before the estate of Murdlestoun was acquired by the marriage of one of those chieftains with the heiress, in 1236. Hence they bear the cognizance of the Scotts upon the field; whereas those of the Buccleuch are

* Sic in orig.
disposed upon a bend dexter, assumed in consequence of marriage.—See Gladstone of Whitley's MSS. a Stokoe's Pedigree, Newcastle, 1783.

Walter Scott of Harden, who flourished during Queen Mary, was a renowned Border free-booter, whom tradition has preserved a variety of anecdote which have been published in the Minstrelsy of the Border, and others in Leyden's Scenes of Insanity; and lately, in The Mountain Bard, a collection of Border songs by Mr. James Hogg. The bugle horn, said to have been this formidable leader, is preserved by his descendants to the present time. His castle was situate up the Borthwick, in a recess; he is said to have kept his spoil, which served for maintenance of his retainers, until the production of clean spurs, in a covered dish, announced to the hurry that they must ride for a supply of provisions. He was the father of Philip Scott of Dryhope, in song the Flower of Yarrow. He possessed a veritable estate, which was divided among his five sons. The meritorious descendants of this old martirizing Baron, lowing beautiful passage of Leyden's Scenes of Life founded on a tradition respecting an infant captive. Walter of Harden carried off in a predatory incursion who is said to have become the author of some of beautiful pastoral songs.

Where Bortha hoarse, that leads the meads w
Rolls her red tide to Teviot's western strand,
Through slaty hills, whose sides are slaggged w
Where springs, in scattered tufts, the dark-gree
Towers wood-girt Harden, far above the vale,
And clouds of ravens o'er the turrets sail.
A hardy race, who never shrunk from war,
The Scott, to rival realms a mighty bar,
NOTES TO CANTO FOURTH.

Here fixed his mountain-home;—a wide domain,
And rich the soil, had purple heath been grain;
But, what the niggard ground of wealth denied,
From fields more blessed his fearless arm supplied.

The waning harvest-moon shone cold and bright;
The warden's horn was heard at dead of night;
And, as the massy portals wide were flung,
With stamping hoofs the rocky pavement rung.
What fair, half-veiled, leams from her latticed balm,
Where red the wavering gleams of torch-light fall?
'Tis Yarrow's fairest Flower, who, through the gloom,
Looks, wistful, for her lover's dancing plume.
Amid the piles of spoil, that strewed the ground,
Her ear, all anxious, caught a wailing sound;
With trembling haste the youthful matron flew,
And from the hurried heaps an infant drew.

Scared at the light, his little hands he flung
Around her neck, and to her bosom clung;
While beauteous Mary soothed, in accents mild,
His fluttering soul, and clasped her foster child.
Of milder mood the gentle captive grew,
Nor loved the scenes that scared his infant view;
In vales remote, from camps and castles far,
He shunned the fearful shuddering joy of war;
Content the loves of simple swains to sing,
Or wake to fame the harp's heroic string.

His are the strains, whose wandering echoes thrill
The shepherd, lingering on the twilight hill,
When evening brings the merry folding hours,
And sun-eyed daisies close their winking flowers,
He lived, o'er Yarrow's Flower to shed the tear,
To strew the holly leaves o'er Harden's bier;
But none was found above the minstrel's tomb
Emblem of peace, to bid the daisy bloom.
NOTES TO CANTO FOURTH.

Ilc, nameless as the race from which he sprung,
Saved other names, and left his own unsung.

Note XII.
Scott's of Eskdale, a stalwart band.—P. 75.
In this, and the following stanzas, some account is given of the mode in which the property of the valley of Eske was transferred from the Beattisons, its ancient possessors, to the name of Scott. It is needless to repeat the circumstances, which are given in the poem, literally as they have been preserved by tradition. Lord Maxwell, in the latter part of the sixteenth century, took upon himself the title of Earl of Morton. The descendants of Beattison of Woodkerricke, who aided the earl to escape from his disobedient vassals, continued to hold these lands within the memory of man, and were the only Beattisons who had property in the dale. The old people give locality to the story, by showing the Galliard's Haugh, the place where Buccleuch's men were concealed, &c.

Note XIII.
Their gathering word was Bellenden.—P. 78.
Bellenden is situated near the head of Borthwick water, and, being in the centre of the possessions of the Scotts, was frequently used as their place of rendezvous and gathering word.—Survey of Selkirkshire, in Macfarlane's Mss. Advocates' Library. Hence Satchells calls one part of his genealogical account of the families of that clan, his Bellenden.

Note XIV.
The camp their home, their law the sword,
They knew no country, owned no lord.—P. 81.
The mercenary adventurers, whom, in 1390, the Earl of Cambridge carried to the assistance of the King of Portagal against the Spaniards, mutinied for want of regular pay.
At an assembly of their leaders, Sir John Soiltier, a natural son of Edward the Black Prince, thus addressed them: "I, counsayle, let us be ale of one alliance, and of one accorde.
and let us among ourselves reyse up the baner of St. George, and let us be frendes to God, and enemies to alle the worlde; for without we make ourselve to be feared, we gette nothyngne."

"By my sayth," quod Sir William Helmon, "ye saye right well, and so let us do." They all agreed with one voyce, and so regarded among them who shulde be their capitayne. Then they advysed in the case how they coude nat have a better capitayne than Sir John Soltier. For they sulde than have good leyser to do yvell, and they thought he was more meteyler thereto than any other. Than they raised up the penon of St. George, and cried "A Solter! a Soltier! the valyant bastarde! frends to God, and enemies to all the worlde!"

_Froissart_, vol. I. ch. 393.

Note XV.

_A gauntlet on a spear._—P. 83.

A glove upon a lance was the embleme of faith among the ancient borderers, who were wont, when any one broke his word, to expose this emblem, and proclaim him a faithless villain at the first border meeting. This ceremony was much dreaded. See Legy.

Note XVI.

_We claim from thee William of Deloraine, That he may suffer march-treason pain._—P. 85.

Several species of offences, peculiar to the Border, constituted what was called March-treason. Among others, was the crime of riding or causyng to ride, against the opposite country during the tyme of truce. This, in an indenture made at the water of Easke, beside Salom, the 25th day of March, 1384, betwixt noble lords and mighty, Sirs Henry Percy, Earl of Northumberland, and Archibald Douglas, Lord of Galoway, a truce is agreed upon until the 1st day of July; and it is expressly accorded, "Gif ouy stellis authirix on the to part, or on the tothyr, that he shall be henget or bestris; and gif ouy cumpany stellis any gudes within the.
NOTES TO CANTO FOURTH.

trieux before-said, one of that 'company sail be heget or heofold, and the remanant sail restore the gy dys stolen in the dubble."—History of Westmoreland and Cumberland, Introd. p. xxxix.

Note XVII.

William of Deloraine

Will cleanse him, by oath, of march-treason stain.—P. 96.

In dubious cases, the innocence of Border-criminals was occasionally referred to their own oath. The form of excusing bills, or indictments, by Border-oath, ran thus: "You shall swear by heaven above you, hell beneath you, by your part of Paradise, by all that God made in six days and seven nights, and by God himself, you are whart out sackless of art, part, way, witting, ridd, kenning, having, or recutting of any of the goods and cattels named in this bill. So help you God."—History of Cumberland, Introd. p. xiv.

Note XVIII.

Knighthood he took of Douglas' sword.—P. 96.

The dignity of knighthood, according to the original institution, had this peculiarity, that it did not flow from the monarch, but could be conferred by one who himself possessed it, upon any squire who, after due probation, was found to merit the honour of chivalry. Latterly, this power was confined to generals, who were wont to create knights bannerets after or before an engagement. Even so late as the reign of Queen Elizabeth, Essex highly offended his jealous sovereign by the indiscriminate exertion of this privilege. Amongst others, he knighted the witty Sir John Harrington, whose favour at court was by no means enhanced by his new honours.—See the Nugs Antiqua, edited by Mr. Park. But probably the latest instance of knighthood, conferred by a subject was in the case of Thomas Ker, knighted by the Earl of Hunting, after the defeat of the Earl of Argyle in the battle of Belrimes. The fact is attested, both by a poetical and prose account of the engagement, contained in an ancient MS.
NOTES TO CANTO FOURTH.

the advocates' library, and lately edited by Mr. Dalyell, in Godly Songs and Ballets, Edin. 1802.

Note XIX.

When English blood swelled Ancram ford.—P. 88.

The battle of Ancram Moor, or Peniel-heuch, was fought A. D. 1545. The English, commanded by Sir Ralph Evers, and Sir Bryan Latoun, were totally routed, and both their leaders slain in the action. The Scottish army was commanded by Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, assisted by the Laird of Buccleuch and Norman Lealy.

Note XX.

The blanche lion.—P. 89.

This was the cognisance of the noble house of Howard in all its branches. The crest, or bearing, of a warrior, was often used as a nomme de guerre. Thus Richard III. acquired his well-known epithet The Bear of York. In the violent satire on Cardinal Wolsey, written by Roy, commonly, but erroneously, imputed to Dr. Bull, the Duke of Buckingham is called the Beautiful Swan, and the Duke of Norfolk, or Earl of Surrey, the White Lion. As the book is extremely rare, and the whole passage relates to the emblematical interpretation of heraldry, it shall be here given at length.

The Description of the Armes.

Of the proud Cardinal this is the sheide,
Borne up betwene two angels of Sathan;
The sise blody axes in a bare felese,
Sheweth the cruelte of the red man,
Which hath devoured the Beautiful Swan,
Mortal enemy unto the Whyte Lion,
Carter of Yorke, the yle butcher's some.
The sise bulles heddes in a felese blacke,
Betokeneth his stordy fursousness,
Wherefore, the godly lyght to put abacke,
He bryngeth in his dyvlish darcnes;
The bandog in the middles doth expresse
The mastiff curte breed in Ypawich towne,
Gnavyng with his te thy a kinges crowne.
The cloube signifieth playne his tiranny,
Covered over with a cardinal’s hatt,
Wherin shaull be fulfilled the prophecy,
Aryse up Jacke, and put on thy salatt,
For the tyme is come of bagge and walatt.
The temporall chevalry thus thrown doune,
Wherfor prest take hede, and beware they crowne.

There are two copies of this very scarce satire in the library of the late John, Duke of Roxburgh. See an account of it also in Mr. Egerton Bridges’ curious miscellany, the Censers Litteraria.

Note XXI.
Let Musgrave meet fierce Deloraine
In single fight.—P. 89.

It may easily be supposed, that trial by single combat, so peculiar to the feudal system, was common on the Borders. In 1558, the well-known Kirkaldy of Grange fought a duel with Ralph Evre, brother to the then Lord Evre, in consequence of a dispute about a prisoner said to have been ill treated by the Lord Evre. Pitscottie gives the following account of the affair: “The Lord of Ivers his brother provoked William Kirkaldy of Grange to fight with him, in single combat, on horseback, with spears; who keeping the appointment accompanied with Monsieur d’Ossel, lieutenant to the French king, and the garrison of Haymouth, and Mr. Ivers, accompanied with the governor and garrison of Berwick, it was discharged, under the pain of treason, that any man should come near the champions within a flight-shot, except one man for either of them, to bear their spears, two trumpets, and two lords, to be judges. When they were in readiness, the trumpets sounded, the heralds cried, and the Judges let them go. Then they encountered very fiercely; but Grange struck his spear through his adversary’s shoulder, and bare him off his horse, being sore wounded: but whether he died or not, it is uncertain."—P. 202.

The following indenture will show at how late a period the trial by combat was resorted to on the Border, as a proof of guilt or innocence:

"It is agreed between Thomas Musgrave and Lancelot Car-tlton, for the true trial of such controversies as are betwixt them, to have it openly tried by way of combat, before God and the face of the world, to try it in Canonbyholme, before England and Scotland, upon Thursday in Easter-week, being the eighth day of April next ensuing, A. D. 1602, betwixt nine of the clock, and one of the same day, to fight on foot, to be armed with jack, steel cap, plaite sleeves, plaite breaches, plaite sockes, two baslearcd swords, the blades to be one yard and a half a quarter of length, two Scotch daggers, or dorks, at their girdles, and either of them to provide armour and weapons for themselves according to this indenture.

Two gentlemen to be appointed on the field, to view both the parties: to see that they both be equal in arms and weapons, according to this indenture; and being so viewed by the gentlemen, the gentlemen to ride to the rest of the company, and to leave them but two boys, viewed by the gentlemen, to be under sixteen years of age, to hold their horses. In testimony of this our agreement, we have both set our hands to this indenture, of intent all matters shall be made so plain, as there shall be no question to stick upon that day.
Which indenture, as a witness shall be delivered to two gentlemen. And for that it is convenient the world should be privy to every particular of the grounds of the quarrel, we have agreed to set it down in this indenture betwixt us, that, knowing the quarrel, their eyes may be witness of the trial.

The grounds of the Quarrel.

"1. Lancelot Carlton did charge Thomas Musgrave before the lords of her majesty's privy council, that Lancelot Carlton was told by a gentleman, one of her majesty's sworn sevom that Thomas Musgrave had offered to deliver her majesty’s castle of Bewcastle to the king of Scots; and to witness the same, Lancelot Carleton had a letter under the gentleman’s own hand for his discharge.

“2. He chargeth him, that whereas her majesty doth yearly bestow a great fee upon him, as captain of Bewcastle, to aid and defend her majesty’s subjects therein; Thomas Musgrave hath neglected his duty, for that her majesty’s castle of Bewcastle was by him made a den of thieves, and an harbour and receipt for murderers, felons, and all sorts of misdemeanors. The precedent was Quinten Whitehead and Runlon Blackburne.

“3. He chargeth him, that his office of Bewcastle is open for the Scotch to ride in and through, and small resistance made by him to the contrary.

“Thomas Musgrave doth deny all his charge; and saith, that he will prove that Lancelot Carleton doth falsely bely him, and will prove the same by way of combat, according to this indenture. Lancelot Carleton hath entertained the challenge, and so, by God’s permission, will prove it true as before, and hath set his hand to the same.

(Signed) Thomas Musgrave.
Lancelot Carleton.”

Note XXII.

_He, the jovial Harper._—P. 31.

The person, here alluded to, is one of our ancient Border minstrels called Rattling Roaring Willie. This sobriquet was probably derived from his bullying disposition; being, it would seem, such a roaring boy, as is frequently mentioned in old plays. While drinking at Newmhill, upon Teviot, about five miles above Hawick, Willie chanced to quarrel with one of his own profession, who was usually distinguished by the odd name of Sweet Milk, from a place on Rule water so called. They retired to a meadow, on the opposite side of the Teviot, to decide the contest with their swords, and Sweet Milk was killed on the spot. A thorn-tree marks the scene of the murder, which is still called Sweet Milk Thorn. Willie was taken and executed at Jedburgh, bequeathing his name to the beautiful Scotch air, called "Rattling Roaring Willie." Ramsay, who set no value on traditionary lore published a few verses of this song in the Tea Table Miscellany, carefully suppressing all which had any connexion with the history of the author, and origin of the piece. In this case, however, honest Allen is in some degree justified, by the extreme worthlessness of the poetry. A verse or two may be taken as illustrative of the history of Roaring Willie, alluded to in the text.

Now Willie's gone to Jeddart,
   And he's for the rood-day,*
But Stobs and young Falmash,†
   They followed him a' the way;
They followed him a' the way,
   They sought him up and down,
In the links of Ousenam water,
   They fand him sleeping sound.

Stobs lighted aff his horse,
   And never a word he spak,
Till he tied Willie's hands
   Fu' fast behind his back;
Fu' fast behind his back,
   And down beneath his knee,
And drink will be dear to Willie,
   When Sweet Milk| gars him die.

* The day of the Rood fair at Jedburgh.
† Sir Gilbert Elliot of Stobs, and Scott of Falmash.
‡ A wretched pun on his antagonist's name.
NOTES TO CANTO FOURTH.

Ah wae light on ye, Stobs!
An ill death mot ye die!
Ye're the first and foremost man
That e'er laid hands on me;
That e'er laid hands on me,
And took my mare me frae;
Wae to you, Sir Gilbert Elliot!
Ye are my mortal fae!

The lasses of Ousenam water
Are rugging and riving their hair,
And a' for the sake of Willie,
His beauty was so fair:
His beauty was so fair,
And comely for to see,
And drink will be dear to Willie,
When Sweet Milk gars him die.

Note XXIII.
- Black Lord Archibald's battle law,
  In the old Douglas' day.—P. 92.

The title to the most ancient collection of Border regulations runs thus:

"Be it remembered, that, on the 18th day of December, 1468, Earl William Douglas assembled the whole lords, freeholders, and eldest Borderers, that best knowledge had, at the college of Lincluden; and there he caused those lords and Borderers bodily to be sworn, the Holy Gospel touched, that they, justly and truly, after their cunning, should decrete, decern, deliver, and put in order and writing, the statutes, ordinances, and uses of marche, that were ordained in Black Archibald of Douglas's days, and Archibald his son's days, in time of warfare; and they came again to him advisedly with these statutes and ordinances, which were in time of warfare before. The said Earl William, seeing the statutes in writing decreed and delivered by the said lords and Borderers, thought them right speedful and profitable to the Borderers; the which statutes,
nances, and points of warfare, he took, and the whole lords Borderers he caused bodily to be sworn, that they should stain and supply him at their goodly power, to do the law; those that should break the statutes underwritten. Also, said Earl William, and lords and eldest Borderers, made in points to be treason in time of warfare to be used, which were no treason before his time, but to be treason in his and in all time coming.
NOTES TO CANTO FIFTH.

Note I.

The Bloody Heart blazed in the van,

Announcing Douglas, dreaded name.—P. 99.

The chief of this potent race of heroes, about the date poem, was Archibald Douglas, seventh Earl of Angus, a great courage and activity. The Bloody Heart was the known cognizance of the house of Douglas, assumed fr time of good Lord James, to whose care Robert Bruce ca ted his heart, to be carried to the Holy Land.

Note II.

— The Seven Spears of Wedderburne.—P. 99.

Sir David Home of Wedderburne, who was slain in the battle of Flodden, left seven sons by his wife, Isabel, da do of Hopringle of Galashiels (now Pringle of Whith). Th

They were called the Seven Spears of Wedderburne.

Note III.

And Swinton laid the lance in rest,

That tamed of yore the sparkling crest

Of Clarence's Plantagenet.—P. 99.

At the battle of Beaugue, in France, Thomas, Duke rence, brother to Henry V., was unhorsed by Sir John S of Swinton, who distinguished him by a coronet set w

cious stones, which he wore around his helmet. The of Swinton is one of the most ancient in Scotland, a duced many celebrated warriors.

NOTES TO CANTO FIFTH.

Note IV.

Beneath the crest of old Dunbar,
And Hepburn's mingled banners, come,
Down the steep mountain glittering far,
And shouting still, "a Home! a Home!"—

The Earls of Home, as descendants of the Duke of March, carried a lion rampant, argent; but in the revolution of 1689, they changed the colour of the shield from gules to Greenlaw, their ancient possession. The war-cry, of this powerful family, was, "A Home! a Home!" which was anciently placed in an escutcheon above the crest. The arms of the Hepburns are armed with a lion's head erased, with a crescent between two lions passant guardant, turned up ermine.

The Hepburns, a powerful family in East Lothian, are in close alliance with the Homes. The chief of the Hepburns was Lord of Hailes; a family which term the too famous Earl of Bothwell.

Note V.

Pursued the foot-ball play.—P. 101.

The foot-ball was anciently a very favourite sport all over Scotland; but especially upon the Borders. Sir John Carmichael, of Carmichael, warden of the middle marches, was killed in 1600 by a band of the Armstrongs, returning from a foot-ball match. Sir Robert Carey, in his Memoirs, mentions that the Scottish riders of Kelso, for the purpose of playing at foot-ball, but were eliminated in an incursion upon England. At present, the ball is often played by the inhabitants of adjacent parts of the opposite banks of a stream. The victory is sometimes taken place in the struggle.
226  NOTES TO CANTO FIFTH.

Note VI.

"Twist truce and war, such sudden chang
Was not unfrequent, nor held strange,
In the old Border day.—P. 102.

Notwithstanding the constant wars upon the
the occasional cruelties which marked the mutual inhabitants on either side do not appear to have no other with that violent and personal animosity, v have been expected. On the contrary, like the on tile armies, they often carried on something resem
ly intercourse, even in the middle of hostilities;
dent, from various ordinances against trade ar
riages between English and Scottish Borderers, vernments of both countries were jealous of the too intimate a connexion. Froissart says of both "Englyshemen on the one party, and Scotoes on t ty, are good men of warre; for when they meet harde fight without sparynge. There is no hoo (tr them, as long as spears, swords, axes, or daggers, but lay on ech upon uther; and when they be and that the one party hath obtained the victor egloryfye so in theyre dedes of armes, and are so such as be taken they shall be ransomed, or that t
the feilde; so that shortly ech of them is so ot other, that, at their departynge, curtsyde they v thanked you."—Berner's Froissart, vol. II. p. 158.
meetings of truce, which, although places of mer merriment, often witnessed the most bloody sc illustrate the description in the text. They portrayed in the old ballad of the Reidesclair, came armed to a meeting of the wardens, yet th
lessly and peacably with each other in mutu
familiar intercourse, until a casual fray arose:

Then was there nought but bow and speer
And every man pulled out a brand.
NOTES TO CANTO FIFTH.

In the 29th stanza of this Canto, there is an attempt to express some of the mixed feelings, with which the Borderers on each side were led to regard their neighbours.

Note VII.

And frequent, on the darkening plain,
Loud hails, whoop, or whistle run;
As bands, their strugglers to regain,
Give the shrill watch-word of their clan.—P. 102.

Patten remarks, with bitter censure, the disorderly conduct of the English Borderers, who attended the Protector Somerset on his expedition against Scotland. "As we wear then a setting, and the tents a setting up, among all things els commendable in our hole journey, one thing seemed to me an intolerable disorder and abuse: that whereas allways, both in all tounes of war, and in all campes of armies, quietnes and stilies, without nois, is, principally in the night, after the watch is set, observed, (I nede not reason why,) our northern prikkers, the Borderers, notwithstanding, with great enormities, (as thought me,) and not unlike (to be playn) unto a masteries hounde howlyng in a lie wey when he hath lost him he waited upon, sum hoopynge, sum whistlyng, and most with crying;

A Berwyke, a Berwyke! A Fenwyke, a Fenwyke! A Bulmer, a Bulmer! or so otherwise as theyr captains names wear, never lin'de these troublous and dangerous noyses all the nyghte longe. They said, they did it to finde their captain and fellows; but if the soldiers of our other countreys and sheres had used the same manner, in that case we should have oft tymes had the state of our camp more like the outrage of a dissolute huntyng, than the quiet of a well ordered armye. It is a feat of war, in mine opinion, that might right well be left. I could rehearse causes (but,) f I take it, they are better unspoken than uttered, unless the faut wear sure to be amended) that might shew thei move alweis more peral to our armie, but in their one nyght's so doyng, than they shew good service (as sum sey) in a hoole voyage."—Apud Daltzell's Fragments, p. 15.
Note VIII.

Cheer the dark blood-bound on his way,
And with the bugle rouse the fray.—P. 116.

The pursuit of Border marauders was followed in the 17th century, and his friends with blood-hounds and horn, and was called the hot-trail. He was entitled, if I could trace the scent, to follow the invaders into the kingdom; a privilege which often occasioned bloodshed. In addition to what has been said of the blood-hound, I may state that the breed was kept up by the Buccleuch family on their estates till within the 18th century. A person was kept at Eldinhope, in Ettrick Forest, for whose maintenance the tenant had an allowance of meal. At that time the tenants were always watched at night. Upon one occasion, when the duty had fallen on the narrator, then a lad, he became exhausted with fatigue, and fell asleep upon a bank, near spiring. Suddenly he was awakened by the tread of horses. He saw five men, well mounted and armed, ride briskly up the edge of the hill. They stopped and looked at the flanks of the day was too far broken to admit the chance of their getting any of them off. One of them, in spite, leaped from the horse, and coming to the shepherd, seized him by the beard, wore round his waist; and setting his foot upon his body, lifted it till it broke, and carried it away with him. They started off at the gallop; and, the shepherd giving the alarm, the blood-hound was turned loose, and the people in the neighborhood alarmed. The marauders, however, escaped, not only standing a sharp pursuit. This circumstance serves to show how very long the license of the Borderers continued in some degree to manifest itself.
Note VIII.

_Cheer the dark blood-hound on his way,
And with the bugle rouse the fray._—P. 116.

The pursuit of Border marauders was followed by injured party and his friends with blood-hounds and the horn, and was called the _hot-trod_. He was entitled, if his could trace the scent, to follow the invaders into the opp kingdom; a privilege which often occasioned bloodshed. Addition to what has been said of the blood-hound, I may that the breed was kept up by the Buccleuch family on Border estates till within the 18th century. A person was in the memory of man, who remembered a blood-hound kept at Eldinhope, in Ettricke Forest, for whose tenant had an allowance of meal. At that time the were always watched at night. Upon one occasion, whose duty had fallen on the narrator, then a lad, he became haunted with fatigue, and fell asleep, upon a bank, near stan. Suddenly he was awakened by the tread of horses saw five men, well mounted and armed, ride briskly one edge of the hill. They stopped and looked at the flock the day was too far broken to admit the chance of their any of them off. One of them, in spite, leaped from horse, and coming to the shepherd, seized him by the wore round his waist; and setting his foot upon his body, ed it till it broke, and carried it away with him. They off at the gallop; and, the shepherd giving the alarm blood-hound was turned loose, and the people in the neigh hood alarmed. The marauders, however, escaped, not standing a sharp pursuit. This circumstance serves to how very long the license of the Borderers continued in degree to manifest itself.
NOTES TO CANTO SIXTH.

Note I.

She wrought not by forbidden spell.—P. 123.

Popular belief, though contrary to the doctrines of the church, made a favourable distinction betwixt magicians and necromancers, or wizards; the former were supposed to command the evil spirits, and the latter to serve, or at least to be in league and compact with those enemies of mankind. The arts of subjecting the demons were manifold; and sometimes the fiends were actually swindled by the magicians, as in the case of the bargain betwixt one of their number and the poet Virgil. The classical reader will, doubtless, be curious to peruse this anecdote:

"Virgil was at school at Tolentum, where he studied diligently, for he was of great understandynge. Upon a tyme, the scolers had lycense to go to play and sporte them in the fyldes, after the usuance of the holde tyme. And there was also Virgilus therebye, also walyng among the hylles alle about. It fortuned he spayed a great hole in the syde of a great hyll, wherein he went so depe, that he could not see no more lyght; and then he went a lytell farther therin, and than he saw some lyght agayne, and than he went fourth streyghte, and within a lytell wyll after he haerde a voyce that called, 'Virgilius! Virgilius!' and looked aboute, and he colde nat see no body. Then sayd he, (i.e. the voice,) Virgilius, see ye not the lytlyl bourde lyying byside you there markd with that word? Then answered Virgilius, 'I see that borde well enough.' The voyce said, 'Doo awaye that borde, and lette me out thereate.' Then answered Virgilius to the voice that was under the lytell borde, and sayde, 'Who art thou that callest me so?' Then answered the devyll, 'I am a devyll conjured out of the body of a cer-teyne man, and banysshed here tyl the day of judgn out that I be delyvered by the handes of men. Thys
I pray the, delyvere me out of this payn, and I shall s
the many bokes of negromancye, and how thou shal it lyghtly, and know the pratyse therein, that no scyence of negromancye shall passe the. And we shall shewe and enforce the so, that thou shalt ha desyre, whereby mythyynke it is a great gyfte for doyng. For ye may also thus all your power frendy make ryche your enemies.—Thorough that gese was Virgillus tempted; he badde the fynde shew to him, that he might have and occupie them at his w the fynde shewed him. And than Virgillus pull bourde, and there was a lyttell hole, and theret was vill out lyke a yeel, and cam and stode before Virg:
bygge man; whereof Virgillus was astonied and greatly thereof, that so great a man myght come o tle a hole. Than sayd Virgillus; ‘Shulde ye well the hole that ye cam out of?’—‘Yea, I shall well,’ a
vyl. ‘I hold the best plegge that I have, that ye s it.’—‘Well,’ said the devyl, ‘thereto I consent.’ Az devyl wrange hymselfe into the lyttel hole ageyne was therin, Virgillus kyvered the hole ageyne with close, and so was the devyl begyled, and myght come out agen, but abydeth hytte stylly therin. T
the devyl dredefully to Virgillus, and said, ‘Wha done, Virgillus?’ Virgillus answered, ‘Abyde the your day appoynted; and fro thens forth abydeth h
And so Virgillus became very connynge in the praty black sciencye.’

This story may remind the reader of the Arabian Fisherman and the imprisned Genie; and it is mor bable, that many of the marvels narrated in the lift are of oriental extraction. Among such I am dispo kon the following whimsical account of the founct plez; containing a curious theory concerning the e that quakes with which it is afflicted. Virgil, wi
NOTES TO CANTO SIXTH.

an of gallantry, had, it seems, carried off the daughter of a certain Soldan, and was anxious to secure his prize.

Than he thought in his mynde howe he myghte mareye hyr and thought in his mynde to founde in the middes of the see a tower town, with great lands longynge to it; and so he dyd by his cunninge, and called it Napells. And the fandacyon of it was of egges, and in that town of Napells he made a tower with ilti corners, and in the top he set an appell upon an yon yarde, and no man culde pull away that apel without he brake it; and through that yren set he a bolte, and in that bolte set he a egge. And he henge the appell by the stauke upon a cheyne, and so hangeth it still. And when the egge styrreth, so shalde the town of Napells quake; and when the egge brake, than shulde the towne sinke. Whan he had made an ende, he lette call it Napells." This appears to have been an article of current belief during the middle ages, as appears from the statutes of the order Du Saint Esprit, ou droit desir, instituted in 1362. A chapter of the knights is appointed to be held annually at the Castle of the Enchanted Egg, near the grotto of Virgil.—Montfaucon, Vol. II. p. 126.

Note II.

A merlin sat upon her wrist.—P. 124.

A merlin, or sparrow-hawk, was usually carried by ladies of rank, as a falcon was, in time of peace, the constant attendant of a knight, or baron. See Latham on Falconry.—Godscroft relates, that, when Mary of Lorraine was regent, she pressed the Earl of Angus to admit a royal garrison into his castle of Tantallon. To this he returned no direct answer; but, as if apostrophising a goos-hawk which sat on his wrist, and which he was feeding during the Queen’s speech, he exclaimed, “The devil’s in this greedy glade, she will never be full.” Hume’s complains of the common and indecent practice of bringing hawks and hounds into churches.
Note III.
And princely peacock’s gilded train.—P. 124.

The peacock, it is well known, was considered, during the times of chivalry, not merely as an exquisite delicacy, but as a dish of peculiar solemnity. After being roasted, it was again decorated with its plumage, and a sponge, dipped in lighted spirits of wine, was placed in its bill. When it was introduced on days of grand festival, it was the signal for the adventurous knights to take upon them vows to do some deed of chivalry, “before the peacock and the ladies.”

Note IV.
And o’er the boar-head, garnished brave.—P. 124.

The boar’s head was also an unusual dish of feudal splendour. In Scotland it was sometimes surrounded with little banners, displaying the colours and achievements of the baron, at whose board it was served.—Pinkerton’s History, Vol. L p. 432.

Note V.
And cygnet from St. Mary’s wave.—P. 124.

There are often flights of wild swans upon St. Mary’s lake at the head of the river Yarrow.

Note VI.
Smote, with his gauntlet, stout Hunthill.—P. 125.

The Rutherfords of Hunthill were an ancient race of Border lairds, whose names occur in history, sometimes as defending the frontier against the English, sometimes as disturbing the peace of their own country. Dickon Draw-the-sword was son to the ancient warrior, called in tradition the Cock of Hunthill.

Note VII.
But bit his glove and shook his head.—P. 128.

To bite the thumb, or the glove, seems not to have been considered, upon the Border, as a gesture of contempt, though so
NOTES TO CANTO SIXTH.

...med by Shakspeare, but as a pledge of mortal revenge. It is yet remembered, that a young gentleman of Teviotdale, on the morning after a hard drinking-boat, observed, that he had bitten his glove. He instantly demanded of his companion, with whom he had quarrelled? and learning that he had had words with one of the party, insisted on instant satisfaction, asserting, that though he remembered nothing of the dispute, yet he was sure he never would have bit his glove unless he had received some unpardonable insult. He fell in the duel, which was fought near Selkirk, in 1721.

Note VIII.

—— Arthur Fire-the-brace.—P. 126.

The person, bearing this redoubtable nomme de guerre, was an Elliot, and resided at Thorleshope, in Liddeadale. He occurs in the list of Border riders, in 1587.

Note IX.

Since old Buccleuch the name did gain,
When in the cleuch the buck was ta'en.—P. 127.

A tradition, preserved by Scott of Satchells, who published, in 1688, A true History of the right Honourable Name of Scott, gives the following romantic origin of that name. Two brethren, natives of Galloway, having been banished from that country for a riot, or insurrection, came to Rankelburn, in Etricke forest, where the keeper, whose name was Brydone, received them joyfully, on account of their skill in winding the horn, and in the other mysteries of the chase.—Kenneth MacAlpine, then king of Scotland, came soon after to hunt in the royal forest, and pursued a buck from Etricke-beuch to the glen now called Buckleuch, about two miles above the junction of Rankelburn with the river Etricke.—Here the stag stood at bay; and the king and his attendants, who followed on horseback, were thrown out by the steepness of the hill and the morass. John, one of the brethren from Galloway, had followed the chase on foot; and now coming in seized the buck by the horns, and, being a man of great strength and activity, threw him on his back, and run with his burden about up the steep hill, to a place called Cracca-Cross, where Kenneth had halted, and laid the buck at the sovereign's feet.

20

The deer being curee'd in that place,
At his Majesty's demand,
Then John of Galloway ran space,
And fetched water to his hand.
The king did wash into a dish,
And Galloway John he wot;
He said, "Thy name now after this Shall ever be called John Scott.

The forest, and the deer therein,
We commit to thy hand;
For thou shalt sure the ranger be,
If thou obey command:
And for the buck thou stoutly brought
To us up that steep heuch,
Thy designation ever shall Be John Scott in Buckcleuch."

* * * * * * * *

In Scotland no Buckcleuch was then,
Before the buck in the cleuch was slain;
Night's men at first they did appear,
Because moon and stars, to their arms they bear.

* Froissart relates, that a knight of the household of the Compte de Foix exhibited a similar feat of strength. The hall-fire had waxed low, and wood was wanted to mend it. The knight went down to the court-yard, where stood an ass laden with faggots, seized on the animal and his burden, and carrying him up to the hall on his shoulders, tumbled him into the chimney with his heels uppermost; "a humane pleasantry, much applauded by the Count and all the spectators."

† "Minions of the moon," as Falstaff would have said. The
NOTES TO CANTO SIXTH. 235

Their crest, supporters, and hunting-horn,
Shews their beginning from hunting came;
Their name, and stile, the book doth say,
John gained them both into one day. Watt's Bellandens.

The Buccleuch arms have been altered, and now allude pointedly to this hunting, whether real or fabulous. The family now bear Or upon a bend azure, a mullet betwixt two crescents of the field; in addition to which, they formerly bore in the field a hunting horn. The supporters, now two horses, were formerly a hound and buck, or, according to vacation pursued by our ancient Borderers may be justified on the authority of the most polished of the ancient nations: "For the Grecians in old time, and such barbarians as in the continent lived neere unto the sea, or else inhabited the islands, after once they begun to crosse over one to another in ships, became theves, and went abroad under the conduct of their more puissant men, both to enrich themselves, and to fetch in maintenance for the weak; and falling upon towns unfortified, or scatteringly inhabited, rifed them, and made this the best means of their living; being a matter at that time no where in disgrace, but rather carrying with it something of glory. This is manifest by some that dwell upon the continent, amongst whom, so it be performed nobly, it is still esteemed as an ornament. The same is also proved by some of the ancient poets, who introduced men questioning of such as sail by, on all coasts alike, whether they be theves or not; as a thing neyther scorned by such as were asked, nor upbraided by those that were desirous to know. They also robbed one another within the main land; and much of Greece useth that old cus-tome, as the Locris, the Arcadians, and those of the continent in that quarter unto this day. Moreover, the fashion of wearing iron remainseth yet with the people of that continent, from their old trade of theewing."—Hobbes' "Thesophaus," p. 3.

Lond. 1653.
Note X.

——— old Albert Grame,

The Minstrel of that ancient name.—P.

"John Grahame, second son of Malice, Earl commonly surnamed John with the Bright Sword displeasure risen against him at court retired with clan and kindred, into the English Borders, in King Henry the Fourth, where they seated them many of their posterity have continued there ever Sandford speaking of them, says (which indeed went to most of the Borderers on both sides,) "They were moss-troopers, and arrant thieves: Both to E Scotland outlawed; yet sometimes connived at, but gave intelligence forth of Scotland, and would raid at any time upon a raid of the English into Scotland is recorded of a mother to her son (which is proverbial.) Ride Rowlie, hough's in't' pot; that piece of beef was in the pot, and therefore it was for him to go and fetch more."—Introduction to the Cumberland.

The residence of the Greemes being chiefly in said Land, so called because it was claimed by doms, their depredations extended both to England land, with impunity; for as both wardens account proper subjects of their own prince, neither instance nor reparation for their excesses from the oppone, which would have been an acknowledgment of them over them.—See a long correspondence on
NOTES TO CANTO SIXTH.

twixt Lord Dacre and the English Privy Council, in Introduction to History of Cumberland. The Debateable Land was finally divided betwixt England and Scotland, by commissioners appointed by both nations.

Note XI.

The sun shines fair on Carlisle wall.—P. 129.

This burden is adopted, with some alteration, from an old Scottish song beginning thus:

She leaned her back against a thorn,
    The sun shines fair on Carlisle wa’;
And there she has her young babe born,
    And the lyon shall be lord of a’.

Note XII.

Who has not heard of Surrey’s fame?—P. 130.

The gallant and unfortunate Henry Howard, Earl of Surrey, was unquestionably the most accomplished cavalier of his time; and his sonnets display beauties which would do honour to a more polished age. He was beheaded on Tower-hill in 1546; a victim to the mean jealousy of Henry VIII., who could not bear so brilliant a character near his throne.

The song of the supposed bard is founded on an incident said to have happened to the Earl in his travels. Cornelius Agrippa, the celebrated alchemist, showed him, in a looking-glass, the lovely Geraldine, to whose service he had devoted his pen and his sword. The vision represented her as indisposed, and reclined upon a couch, reading her lover’s verses by the light of a waxen taper.

Note XIII.

———The storm-swept Orcades;
Where erst St. Clairs held princely sway,
O’er isle and islet, strait and bay.—P. 133.
The St. Clairs are of Norman extraction, being descended from William de St. Clair, second son of Walderne C de St. Clair, and Margaret, daughter to Richard Duke o mandy. He was called for his fair deportment, the Seen Clair; and settling in Scotland during the reign of Mi
Cemmore, obtained large grants of land in Mid-Loth
These domains were increased by the liberality of ceeding monarchs to the descendants of the family, and prehended the baronies of Roseline, Pencland, Cow Cardaine, and several others. It is said a large addit obtained from Robert Bruce, on the following occasion king, in following the chase upon Pentland hills, had started a "white fawn deer," which had always escaped his hounds; and he asked the nobles, who were around him, whether any of them had dogs, which thought might be more successful. No courtier would that his hounds were fleeter than those of the king, unt William St. Clair of Roseline unceremoniously said, he wager his head that his two favourite dogs, Help and would kill the deer before she could cross the March.
The king instantly caught at his unwary offer, and bette forest of Pentlandmoor against the life of Sir William Clair. All the hounds were tied up, except a few ratch slow hounds, to put up the deer; while Sir William St.
posting himself in the best situation for slipping his prayed devoutly to Christ, the blessed Virgin, and St therine. The deer was shortly after roused, and the h slipped; Sir William following on a gallant steed, to his dogs. The hind, however, reached the middle o brook, upon which the hunter threw himself from his in despair. At this critical moment however, Hold st her in the brook; and Help, coming up, turned her back killed her on Sir William's side. The king descended the hill, embraced Sir William, and bestowed on his lands of Kirkton, Logan-house, Earncraig, &c. in free-for Sir William, in acknowledgment of St. Katherine's cession, built the chapel of St. Katherine in the Hopet churchyard of which is still to be seen. The hill, from w
Robert Bruce beheld this memorable chase, is still called the King's Hill; and the place where Sir William hunted is called the Knight's Field.*—MS. History of the Family of St. Clair, by Richard Augustin Hay, Canon of St. Genevieve.

This adventurous huntsman married Elizabeth, daughter of Malice Spar, Earl of Orkney and Stratherne, in whose right their son Henry was, in 1379, created Earl of Orkney, by Haco, king of Norway. His title was recognised by the kings of Scotland, and remained with his successors until it was annexed to the crown, in 1471, by act of Parliament. In exchange for this earldom, the castle and domains of Ravenscraig, or Ravensheuch, were conferred on William Saintclair, Earl of Caithness.

* The tomb of Sir William St. Clair, on which he appears sculptured in armour, with a greyhound at his feet, is still to be seen in Rosline chapel. The person, who shows it, always tells the story of his hunting match, with some addition to Mr. Hay's account; as that the knight of Rosline's fright made him poetical, and that, in the last emergency, he shouted,

Help, baud, an' ye may,
Or Roslin will lose his head this day.

If this couplet does him no great honour as a poet, the conclusion of the story does him still less credit. He set his foot on the dog, says the narrator, and killed him on the spot, saying, he would never again put his neck in such a risque. As Mr. Hay does not mention this circumstance, I hope it is only founded on the couchant posture of the hound on the monument.
Note XIV.

Still nods their palace to its fall,

Thy pride and sorrow, fair Kirkwall.—P. 183.

The castle of Kirkwall was built by the St. Claire, while Earls of Orkney. It was dismantled by the Earl of Caithness, about 1615, having been garrisoned against the government by Robert Stewart, natural son to the Earl of Orkney.

Its ruins afforded a sad subject of contemplation to John, Master of St. Clair, who, flying from his native country, on account of his share in the insurrection 1715, made some stay at Kirkwall.

"I had occasion to entertain myself at Kirkwall with the melancholic prospect of the ruins of an old castle, the seat of the old Earls of Orkney, my ancestors; and of a more melancholy reflection, of so great and noble an estate as the Orkney and Shetland isles being taken from one of them by James III. for faultrie, after his brother Alexander, duke of Albany, had married a daughter of my family, and for protecting and defending the said Alexander against the king, who wished to kill him, as he had done his youngest brother, the Earl of Mar; and for which after the faultrie, he gratefully divorced my forfaulted ancestor's sister; though I cannot persuade myself that he had any misalliance to plead against a familie in whose veins the blood of Robert Bruce ran as fresh as in his own; for their title to the crowne was by a daughter of David Bruce, son to Robert; and our alliance was by marrying a grandchild of the same Robert Bruce, and daughter to the sister of the same David, out of the familie of Douglas, which at that time did not much sallie the blood, more than my ancestour's having not long before had the honour of marrying a daughter of the king of Denmark's, who was named Florentine, and has left in the town of Kirkwall a noble monument of the grandeur of the times, the finest church ever I saw entire in Scotland. I then had no small reason to think, in that unhappy state, on the many not inconsiderable services rendered since to the royal familie, for these many years by-gone, on all occasions, when they stood most in need of friends, which they have thought themselves very often obliged to acknowledge by letters yet extant, and in a stile more like friends than souveraigns; our attachment to them, without amb other thanks, having brought upon us considerable losses, and among others, that of our all in Cromwell's time; and left in that condition, without the least relief except what we found in our own virtue. My father was the only man of the Scots nation who had courage enough to protest in parliament against King William's title to the throne, which was lost, God's knows how: and this at a time when the losses in the cause of the royall familie, and their usual gratitude, had scarce left him bread to maintain a numerous familie of eleven children, who had soon after sprung up on him, in spite of all which, he had honourably persisted in his principle. I say, those things considered, and after being treated as I was, and in that unluckie state, when objects appear to men in their true light, at the hour of death, could I be blamed for making some bitter reflections to myself, and laughing at the extravagance and unaccountable humour of men, and the singularitie of my own case, (an exile for the cause of the Stuart family,) when I ought to have known, that the greatest crime I, or my family, could have committed, was persevering to my own destruction, in serving the royal familie faithfully, though obstinately, after so great a share of depression; and after they had been pleased to doom me and my familie to starve."—MS. Memoirs of John, Master of St. Clair.

Note XV.

Kings of the main their leaders brave,
Their barkes, the dragons of the wave.—P. 134.

The chiefs of the Vakingr, or Scandinavian pirates, assumed the title of Sakonungr, or Sea-kings. Ships in the inflated language of the Scalds, are often termed the serpents of the ocean.
Note XVI.

Of that Sea-Snake, tremendous curled,
Whose monstrous circle girds the world.—P. 134.

The jormungandr, or Snake of the Ocean, whose fangs surround the earth, is one of the wildest fictions of the Edda. It was very nearly caught by the god Thor, who went to fish for it with a hook baited with a bull’s head. In the battle betwixt the evil demons and the divinities of Odin, which is to precede the Ragnarockr, or Twilight of the Gods, this Snake is to act a conspicuous part.

Note XVII.

Of those dread Maids, whose hideous yell
Maddens the Battle’s bloody swell.—P. 134.

These were the Valkyriu, or Selectors of the Slain, despatched by Odin from Valhalla, to choose those who were to die and to distribute the contest. They are well known to the English reader, as Gray’s Fatal Sisters.

Note XVIII.

Ransacked the graves of warriors old,
Their falchions wrenched from corpses’ hold.—P. 134.

The northern warriors were usually entombed with their arms, and their other treasures. Thus, Angantyr, before commencing the duel in which he was slain, stipulated, that if he fell, his sword Tyrfing should be buried with him. His daughter, Hervor, afterwards took it from his tomb. The dialogue which past betwixt her and Angantyr’s spirit on this occasion has been often translated. The whole history may be found in the Hervarar-Saga. Indeed the ghosts of the northern warriors were not wont tamely to suffer their tombs to be plundered; and hence the mortal heroes had an additional temptation to attempt such adventures; for they held nothing more worthy of their valour than to encounter supernatural beings—Bartholinus De causis contemptae Danis mortis, Lib. I. cap. 2, 9, 10, 13.
NOTES TO CANTO SIXTH.

Note XIX.
—— Rosabelle.—P. 135.
This was a family name in the house of St. Clair. Henry St.
Clair, the second of the line, married Rosabelle, fourth daughter of the Earl of Stratherne.

Note XX.
Castle Rosenshuch.—P. 135.
A large and strong castle, now ruinous, situated betwixt Kirkaldy and Dysart, on a steep crag, washed by the Firth of Forth. It was conferred on Sir William St. Clair, as a slight compensation for the earldom of Orkney, by a charter of King James III. dated in 1471, and is now the property of Sir James St. Clair Erskine, (now Earl of Rosalyn,) representative of the family. It was long a principal residence of the barons of Roslin.

Note XXI.
Seemed all on fire that chapel proud,
Where Roslin's chief's uncoffined lie;
Each Baron, for a sable shroud,
Sheathed in his iron panoply.—P. 136.

The beautiful chapel of Roslin is still in tolerable preservation. It was founded in 1446, by William St. Clair, Prince of Orkney, Duke of Oldenburgh, Earl of Cathness and Stratherne, Lord St. Clair, Lord Niddesdale, Lord Admiral of the Scottish sea, Lord Chief Justice of Scotland, Lord Warden of the three Marches, Baron of Roslin, Penthland, Penthlandmoor, &c. Knight of the Cockle and of the Garter, (as is affirmed,) High Chancellor, Chamberlain, and Lieutenant of Scotland. This lofty person, whose titles, says Godscroft, might weary a Spanlard, built the castle of Roslin, where he resided in princely splendour, and founded the chapel, which is in the most rich and florid style of Gothic architecture. Among the profuse carving on the pillars and buttresses, the rose is frequently introduced, in allusion to the name, with which, however, the flower has no connexion; the etymology being Rossilinahe, the promontory of the linn, or water-fall. The chapel is said to appear on fire previous to the death of any of his descendants. This superstition, noticed by Slezer in his Theatrum Scotiae, and alluded to in the text, is probably of Norwegian derivation, and may have been imported by the Earls of Orkney into their Lothian domains. The tomb-fires of the north are mentioned in most of the Sagas.

The Barons of Roslin were buried in a vault beneath the chapel floor. The manner of their interment is thus described by Father Hay, in the MS. history already quoted.

"Sir William Sinclair, the father, was a leud man. He kept a miller's daughter, with whom, it is alleged, he went to Ireland; yet I think the cause of his retreat was rather occasioned by the Presbyterians, who vexed him sadly, because of his religion being Roman Catholic. His son, Sir William, died during the troubles, and was interred in the chapel of Roslin the very same day that the battle of Dunbar was fought. When my good-father was buried, his (i.e. Sir William's) corpse seemed to be entire at the opening of the cave; but when they came to touch his body, it fell into dust. He was lying in his armour, with a red velvet cap on his head, on a flat stone; nothing was spoiled except a piece of the white furring, that went round the cap, and answered to the hinder part of the head. All his predecessors were buried after the same manner, in their armour: late Rosline, my good-father, was the first that was buried in a coffin; against the sentiments of King James the Seventh, who was then in Scotland, and several other persons well versed in antiquity, to whom my mother would not hearken, thinking it beggarly to be buried after that manner. The great expenses she was at in burying her husband, occasioned the sumptuary acts which were made in the following parliament."

Note XXII.

—Gyblin come!—P. 138.

See the story of Gilpin Horner, pp. 186, 187, 188. in notis.
NOTES TO CANTO SIXTH.

Note XXIII.

For he was speechless, ghastly, wan,
Like him of whom the story ran,
Who spoke the spectre-bound in Man.—P. 139.

The ancient castle of Peel-town, in the Isle of Man, is surrounded by four churches, now ruinous. Through one of these pets there was formerly a passage from the guard-room of garrison. This was closed, it is said, upon the following axiom: "They say, that an apparition, called in the Mankish tongue, the Mauche Doog, in the shape of a large black span, with curled shaggy hair, was used to haunt Peel-castle; has been frequently seen in every room, but particularly in the guard-chamber, where, as soon as candles were lighted, it would come and lay down before the fire, in presence of all the soldiers, who, at length, by being so much accustomed to the sight of it, lost great part of the terror they were seized with at first appearance. They still, however, retained a certain awe, as believing it was an evil spirit, which only waited permission to do them hurt; and for that reason, forbore swearing, and all profane discourse, while in its company. But though they endured the shock of such a guest when altogether in a body, none cared to be left alone with it. It being custom, therefore, for one of the soldiers to lock the gates of the castle at a certain hour, and carry the keys to the captain, to whose apartment, as I said before, the way led through church, they agreed among themselves, that whoever was acceeed the ensuing night his fellow in this errand, should accompany him that went first, and by this means no man should be exposed singly to the danger: for I forgot to mention that the Mauche Doog was always seen to come out from passage at the close of day, and return to it again as soon as morning dawned, which made them look on this place as peculiar residence.

One night, a fellow being drunk, and by the strength of liquor rendered more daring than ordinarily, laughed at simplicity of his companions; and, though it was not his custom to go with the keys, would needs take that office upon 21.
him to testify his courage. All the soldiers endeavoured to dissuade him; but the more they said, the more resolute he seemed, and swore that he desired nothing more than that the \textit{Mauthe Doog} would follow him as it had done the others; for he would try if it were dog or devil. After having talked in a very reprobat manner for some time, he snatched up the keys, and went out of the guard-room: in some time after his departure, a great noise was heard, but nobody had the boldness to see what occasioned it, till, the adventurer returning, they demanded the knowledge of him; but as loud and noisy as he had been at leaving them, he was now become sober and silent enough; for he was never heard to speak more: and though all the time he lived, which was three days, he was entreated by all who came near him, either to speak; or if he could not do that, to make some signs, by which they might understand what had happened to him; yet nothing intelligible could be got from him, only that, by the distortion of his limbs and features, it might be guessed that he died in agonies more than is common in a natural death.

"The \textit{Mauthe Doog} was however never after seen in the castle, nor would any one attempt to go through that passage; for which reason it was closed up, and another way made. This accident happened about three score years since: and I heard it attested by several, but especially by an old soldier, who assured me he had seen it oftener than he had then hairs on his head."—\textit{Waldron's Description of the Isle of Man}, p. 107.

Note XXIV.

\textit{And be a solemn sacred plight}

\textit{Did to St. Bride of Douglas make.}—P. 139.

This was a favourite saint of the house of Douglas, and of the Earl of Angus in particular; as we learn from the following passage. The Queen-regent had proposed to raise a rival noble to the ducal dignity; and discoursing of her purpose with Angus, he answered, "Why not, madam? we are happy that have such a princess, that can know and will acknowledge men's service, and is willing to recompense it: but, by the might of God, (this was his oath when he was serious and in anger; at other times, it was by St. Bride of Douglas,) if he be a Duke, I will be a Drake!”—So she desisted from prosecuting of that purpose.—Godscroft, Vol. II. p. 131.

THE END.
THE

DANCE OF DEATH

AND

OTHER POEMS.

BY

WALTER SCOTT, ESQ.
CONTENTS.

THE Dance of Death, - - - - - - - 253
Romance of Dunois, from the French, - - - 262
The Troubadour, - - - - - - - - - 264
Anacreontic, from the French, - - - - 266
Song, for the Anniversary Meeting of the Pitt Club of Scotland, - - - - - - - - - 267
Song, on the Lifting of the Banner of the House of Buccleuch, at a great Foot-Ball Match on Carterhaugh, - - - - - - - - - - - - 270
The Palmer, - - - - - - - - - - - - 273
The Maid of Neidpath, - - - - - - - 275
Wandering Willie, - - - - - - - - - 279
Hunting Song, - - - - - - - - - - - 282
The Violet, - - - - - - - - - - - - 284
To a Lady, with Flowers from a Roman Wall, 285
The Bard’s Incantation, - - - - - - - 286
The Resolve, - - - - - - - - - - - - 289
Epitaph, - - - - - - - - - - - - - 291
The Return to Ulster, - - - - - - - 292
The Massacre of Glencoe, - - - - - - - 295
Prologue to Miss Baillie’s Play of the Family
Legend, - - - - - - - - - - - - - 297
CONTENTS.

Page

Farewell to Mackenzie, High Chief of Kintail,
  from the Gaelic,  -  -  -  -  -  -  -  -  -  -  -  209
Imitation of the preceding Song,  -  -  -  -  -  -  -  -  -  301
War-Song of Lachlan, High Chief of Maclean,
  from the Gaelic,  -  -  -  -  -  -  -  -  -  -  -  -  303
Saint Cloud,  -  -  -  -  -  -  -  -  -  -  -  -  -  -  305
THE

DANCE OF DEATH.
THE

DANCE OF DEATH.

I.

Night and morning were at meeting
Over Waterloo;
Cocks had sung their earliest greeting,
Faint and low they crew,
For no paly beam yet shone
On the heights of Mount Saint John:
Tempest-clouds prolonged the sway
Of timeless darkness over day;
Whirlwind, thunder-clap, and shower,
Mark'd it a predestined hour.
Broad and frequent through the night
Flashed the sheets of levin-light;
Musquets, glancing lightnings back,
Show'd the dreary bivouack
Where the soldier lay,
Chill, and stiff, and drench'd with rain,
Wishing dawn of morn again
Though death should come with day.
II.
'Tis at such a tide and hour,
Wizard, witch, and fiend have power,
And ghastly forms through mist and show
Gleam on the gifted ken;
And then the affrighted prophet's ear
Drinks whispers strange of fate and fear,
Presaging death and ruin near,
Among the sons of men;—
Apart from Albyn's war-array,
'Twas then gray Allan sleepless lay;
Gray Allan, who, for many a day,
Had follow'd stout and stern,
Where, through battle rout and reel,
Storm of shot and hedge of steel,
Led the grandson of Lochiel,
Valiant Fassiefern.
Through steel and shot he leads no more,
Low-laid 'mid friends' and foemen's gore—
But long his native lake's wild shore,
And Sunart rough, and high Ardgower,
And Morvern long shall tell,
And proud Bennevis hear with awe,
How, upon bloody Quatre-Bras,
Brave Cameron heard the wild hurra
Of conquest as he fell.

III.
'Lone on the outskirts of the host,
The weary sentinel held post,
THE DANCE OF DEATH.

And heard, through darkness far aloof,
The frequent clang of courser’s hoof,
Where held the cloaked patrol their course,
And /red, ’gainst storm, the swerving horse;
But there are sounds in Allan’s ear,
Patrol no sentinel may hear,
And sights before his eye aghast
Invisible to them have passed,

When down the destined plain
Twixt Britain and the bands of France,
Wild as marsh-borne meteors glance,
Strange phantoms wheeled a revel dance,
And doomed the future slain.—
Such forms were seen, such sounds were heard,
When Scotland’s James his march prepared
For Flodden’s fatal plain;
Such, when he drew his ruthless sword,
As Chus’ers of the Slain, adored
The yet unchristened Dane.
An indistinct and phantom band,
They wheeled their ring-dance hand in hand,
With gesture wild and dread;
The Seer, who watched them ride the storm,
Saw through their faint and shadowy form
The lightning’s flash more red;
And still their ghastly roundelay
Was of the coming battle-fray,
And of the destined dead.
IV.

SONG.

Wheel the wild dance
While lightnings glance,
And thunders rattle loud,
And call the brave
To bloody grave,
To sleep without a shroud.

Our airy feet,
So light and fleet,
They do not bend the rye
That sinks its head when whirlwinds rave,
And swells again in eddying wave,
As each wild gust blows by;

But still the corn,
At dawn of morn,
Our fatal steps that bore,
At eve lies waste
A trampled paste
Of blackening mud and gore.

V.

Wheel the wild dance
While lightnings glance,
And thunders rattle loud,
And call the brave
To bloody grave,
To sleep without a shroud.
THE DANCE OF DEATH.

Wheel the wild dance!
Brave sons of France,
For you our ring makes room;
Makes space full wide
For martial pride,
For banner, spear, and plumes.
Approach, draw near,
Proud cuirassier!
Room for the men of steel!
Through crest and plate
The broad-sword's weight
Both head and heart shall feel.

VI.
Wheel the wild dance
While lightnings glance,
And thunders rattle loud,
And call the brave
To bloody grave,
To sleep without a shroud.

Sons of the spear!
You feel us near
In many a ghastly dream;
With fancy's eye
Our forms you spy,
And hear our fatal scream.
With clearer sight
Ere falls the night,
Just when to weal or wo
Your disembodied souls take flight
On trembling wing—each startled sprite
Our choir of death shall know.

VII.
Wheel the wild dance
While lightnings glance,
And thunders rattle loud,
And call the brave
To bloody grave,
To sleep without a shroud.

Burst, ye clouds, in tempest showers;
Redder rain shall soon be ours—
See the east grows wan—
Yield we place to sterner game,
Ere deadlier bolts and drearer flame
Shall the welkin's thunders shame;
Elemental rage is tame
To the wrath of man.

VIII.
At morn, gray Allan's mates with awe
Heard of the vision'd sights he saw,
The legend heard him say;
But the seer's gifted eye was dim,
Deafen'd his ear and stark his limb,
Ere closed that bloody day—
THE DANCE OF DEATH.

He sleeps far from his highland heath,—
But often of the Dance of Death
His comrades tell the tale
On picquet-post, when ebbs the night,
And waning watch-fires glow less bright,
And dawn is glimmering pale.
ROMANCE OF DUNOIS.

FROM THE FRENCH.

The original of this little Romance makes part of a manuscript collection of French Songs, probably compiled by some young officer, which was found on the Field of Waterloo, much stained with clay and with blood, as sufficiently to indicate what had been the fate of its late owner. The song popular in France, and is rather a good specimen of the sty of composition to which it belongs. The translation is strictly literal.

It was Dunois, the young and brave, was bound to Palestine,
But first he made his orisons before Saint Mary's shrine:
"And grant, immortal Queen of Heaven," was st the Soldier's prayer,
"That I may prove the bravest knight, and love thee fairest fair."

His oath of honour on the shrine he graved it with his sword,
And followed to the Holy Land the banner of the Lord;
ROMANCE OF DUNOIS.

Where, faithful to his noble vow, his war-cry filled the air,
"Be honoured aye the bravest knight, beloved the fairest fair."

They owed the conquest to his arm, and then his liege-lord said,
"The heart that has for honour beat by bliss must be repaid,—
My daughter Isabel and thou shall be a wedded pair,
For thou art bravest of the brave, she fairest of the fair."

And then they bound the holy knot before Saint Mary's shrine,
That makes a paradise on earth if hearts and hands combine;
And every lord and lady bright that were in chapel there,
Cried, "Honoured be the bravest knight, beloved the fairest fair."
THE TROUBADOUR.

Glowing with love, on fire for fame,
A Troubadour that hated sorrow,
Beneath his Lady's window came,
And thus he sung his last good-morrow:
"My arm it is my country's right,
My heart is in my true love's bower;
Gayly for love and fame to fight
Befits the gallant Troubadour."

And while he marched with helm on head
And harp in hand, the descant rung,
As faithful to his favourite maid,
The minstrel-burthen still he sung:
"My arm it is my country's right,
My heart is in my lady's bower;
Resolved for love and fame to fight,
I come, a gallant Troubadour."

Even when the battle-roar was deep,
With dauntless heart he hew'd his way,
Mid splintering lance and falchion-sweep,
And still was heard his warrior-lay;
"My life it is my country's right,
   My heart is in my lady's bower;
For love to die, for fame to fight,
   Becomes the valiant Troubadour."

Alas! upon the bloody field
   He fell beneath the foemen's glaive,
But still, reclining on his shield,
   Expiring sung the exulting stave:
"My life it is my country's right,
   My heart is in my lady's bower;
For love and fame to fall in fight
   Becomes the valiant Troubadour."
FROM THE FRENCH.

IT chanced that Cupid on a season,
By Fancy urged, resolved to wed,
But could not settle whether Reason
Or Folly should partake his bed.

What does he then?—Upon my life,
'Twas bad example for a deity—
He takes me Reason for his wife,
And Folly for his hours of gayety.

Though thus he dealt in petty treason,
He loved them both in equal measure;
Fidelity was born of Reason,
And Folly brought to bed of Pleasure.
SONG,

FOR THE ANNIVERSARY MEETING OF THE PITT CLUB OF SCOTLAND.

O dread was the time, and more dreadful the omen,
When the brave on Marengo lay slaughtered in vain,
And, beholding broad Europe bowed down by her foemen,
Prive closed in his anguish the map of her reign!
Not the fate of broad Europe could bend his brave spirit
To take for his country the safety of shame;
O then in her triumph remember his merit,
And hallow the goblet that flows to his name.

Round the husbandman's head, while he traces the furrow,
The mists of the winter may mingle with rain,
He may plough it with labour, and sow it in sorrow,
And sigh while he fears he has sowed it in vain;
He may die ere his children shall reap in their gladness,
But the blithe harvest-home shall remember his claim;
And their jubilee-shout shall be softened with sadness,
While they hallow the goblet that flows to his name.

Though anxious and timeless his life was expended,
In toils for our country preserved by his care,
Though he died ere one ray o'er the nations ascended,
To light the long darkness of doubt and despair;
The storms he endured in our Britain's December,
The perils his wisdom foresaw and o'ercame,
In her glory's rich harvest shall Britain remember,
And hallow the goblet that flows to his name.

Nor forget His gray head, who, all dark in affliction,
Is deaf to the tale of our victories won,
And to sounds the most dear to paternal affection,
The shout of his people applauding his Son;
By his firmness unmoved in success or disaster,
By his long reign of virtue, remember his claim!
With our tribute to Prit join the praise of his Master,
Though a tear stain the goblet that flows to his name.
SONG.

Yet again fill the wine-cup, and change the sad measure,
The rites of our grief and our gratitude paid,
To our Prince, to our Heroes, devote the bright treasure,
The wisdom that planned, and the zeal that obeyed!
Fill Wellington’s cup till it beam like his glory,
Forget not our own brave Dalhousie and Grame;
A thousand years hence hearts shall bound at their story,
And hallow the goblet that flows to their fame.
SONG,

ON THE LIFTING OF THE BANNER OF THE HOUSE OF BUCCLEUCH, AT A GREAT FOOT-BALL MATCH
ON CARTERHAUGH.

From the brown crest of Newark its summons extending,
Our signal is waving in smoke and in flame;
And each forester blithe from his mountain descending,
Bounds light o'er the heather to join in the game

CHORUS.
Then up with the Banner, let forest winds fan her,
She has blazed over Ettrick eight ages and more;
In sport we'll attend her, in battle defend her,
With heart and with hand, like our fathers before.

When the Southern invader spread waste and disorder,
At the glance of her crescents he paused and withdrew,
SONG.

For around them were marshalled the pride of the Border,
The Flowers of the Forest, the Bands of Buccleuch.
Then up with the Banner, &c.

A stripling's weak hand to our revel has borne her,
No mail-glove has grasp'd her, no spearman surround;
But ere a bold foeman should scathe or should scorn her,
A thousand true hearts would be cold on the ground.
Then up with the Banner, &c.

We forget each contention of civil dissention,
And hail, like our brethren, Home, Douglas, and Car;
And Elliot and Pringle in pastime shall thingle,
As welcome in peace as their fathers in war.
Then up with the Banner, &c.

Then strip, lads, and to it, though sharp be the weather,
And if, by mischance, you should happen to fall,
There are worse things in life than a tumble on heather,
And life is itself but a game at foot-ball.
Then up with the Banner, &c.
And when it is over, we'll drink a blithe measure,
To each laird and each lady that witnessed our fun,
And to every blithe heart that took part in our pleasure,
To the lads that have lost and the lads that have won.

Then up with the banner, &c.

May the Forest still flourish, both Borough and Landward,
From the hall of the Peer to the herd's ing' nook;
And huzza! my brave hearts, for Buccleuch and his standard,
For the King and the Country, the Clan and the Duke!

Then up with the Banner, let forest winds fan her,
She has blessed over Ettricke eight ages and more;
In sport we'll attend her, in battle defend her,
With heart and with hand, like our fathers before.
THE PALMER.

"O open the door, some pity to show,
Keen blows the northern wind;
The glen is white with the drifted snow,
And the path is hard to find.

"No Outlaw seeks your castle gate,
From chasing the king's deer,
Though even an Outlaw's wretched state
Might claim compassion here.

"A weary Palmer, worn and weak,
I wander for my sin;
O open for Our Lady's sake,
A pilgrim's blessing win!

"I'll give you pardons from the pope,
And reliques from o'er the sea,—
Or if for these you will not ope,
Yet open for charity.

"The hare is crouching in her form,
The hart beside the hind;
An aged man, amid the storm,
No shelter can I find.
And I must if
Unless you

"The iron gate
At which I knock
The owner's home
Who hears me"

"Farewell, fare
When old and
You never may tell
That's now demented

The Ranger on his
And heard him
But oft amid Decem
He'll hear that voice"
THE

MAID OF NEIDPATH.

There is a tradition in Tweeddale, that, when Neidpath Castle, near Peebles, was inhabited by the Earls of March, a mutual passion subsisted between a daughter of that noble family, and a son of the laird of Tushielaw, in Ettrick Forest. As the alliance was thought unsuitable by her parents, the young man went abroad. During his absence, the lady fell into a consumption; and at length, as the only means of saving her life, her father consented that her lover should be recalled. On the day when he was expected to pass through Peebles, on the road to Tushielaw, the young lady, though much exhausted, caused herself to be carried to the balcony of a house in Peebles, belonging to the family, that she might see him as he rode past. Her anxiety and eagerness gave such force to her organs, that she is said to have distinguished his horse's footsteps at an incredible distance. But Tushielaw, unprepared for the change in her appearance, and not expecting to see her in that place, rode on without recognising her, or even slackening his and, after a short struggle, attendants. There is an in ditional tale in Count Ham
THE

MAID OF NEIDPATH.

O lovers' eyes are sharp to see,
And lovers' ears in hearing;
And love, in life's extremity,
Can lend an hour of cheering.
Disease had been in Mary's bower,
And slow decay from mourning,
Though now she sits on Neidpath's tower,
To watch her love's returning.

All sunk and dim her eyes so bright,
Her form decayed by pining,
Till through her wasted hand, at night,
You saw the taper shining;
By fits, a sultry hectic hue
Across her cheek was flying;
By fits, so ashy pale she grew,
Her maidens thought her dying.

Yet keenest powers to see and hear,
Seemed in her frame residing;
Before the watch-dog pricked his ear,
She heard her lover's riding;

24
Ere scarce a distant form was kenned,
She knew and waved to greet him;
And o'er the battlement did bend,
As on the wing to meet him.

He came—he passed—an heedless gaze,
As o'er some stranger glancing;
Her welcome, spoke in faltering phrase,
Lost in his courser's prancing—
The castle arch, whose hollow tone
Returns each whisper spoken,
Could scarcely catch the feeble moan,
Which told her heart was broken.
WANDERING WILLIE.

All joy was bereft me the day that you left me,
And climbed the tall vessel to sail yon wide sea;
O weary betide it! I wandered beside it,
And bann'd it for parting my Willie and me.

Far o'er the wave hast thou followed thy fortune,
Oft fought the squadrons of France and of Spain;
Ae kiss of welcome's worth twenty at parting,
Now I hae gotten my Willie again.

When the sky it was mirk, and the winds they were wailing,
I sat on the beach wi' the tear in my e'e,
And thought o' the bark where my Willie was sailing,
And wished that the tempest could a' blaw on me.

Now that thy gallant ship rides at her mooring,
Now that my wanderer's in safety at hame,
Music to me were the wildest winds' roaring,
That e'er o'er Inch Keith drove the dark ocean faem.
WANDERING WILLIE.

When the lights they did blaze, and the guns they did rattle,
   And blithe was each heart for the great victory,
In secret I wept for the dangers of battle,
   And thy glory itself was scarce comfort to me.

But now shalt thou tell, while I eagerly listen,
   Of each bold adventure, and every brave scar;
And, trust me, I'll smile, though my een they may glisten;
   For sweet after danger's the tale of the war.

And oh, how we doubt when there's distance 'tween lovers,
   When there's naething to speak to the heart thro' the e'e;
How often the kindest, and warmest, prove rovers,
   And the love of the faithfullest ebbs like the sea.

Till, at times, could I help it? I pined and I ponder'd,
   If love could change notes like the bird on the tree—
Now I'll ne'er ask if thine eyes may hae wander'd,
   Enough, thy leal heart has been constant to me.

Welcome, from sweeping o'er sea and through channel,
   Hardships and danger despising for fame,
Furnishing story for glory's bright annal,
   Welcome, my wanderer, to Jeanie and hame!
WANDERING WILLIE.

Enough, now thy story in annals of glory
Has humbled the pride of France, Holland and Spain;
No more shalt thou grieve me, no more shalt thou leave me,
I never will part with my Willie again.
HUNTING SONG.

Waken lords and ladies gay,
On the mountain dawns the day,
All the jolly chase is here,
With hawk, and horse, and hunting spear;
Hounds are in their couples yelling,
Hawks are whistling, horns are knelling,
Merrily, merrily, mingle they,
"Waken lords and ladies gay."

Waken lords and ladies gay,
The mist has left the mountain gray,
Springlets in the dawn are steaming,
Diamonds on the brake are gleaming:
And foresters have busy been,
To track the buck in thicket green;
Now we come to chant our lay,
"Waken lords and ladies gay."

Waken lords and ladies gay,
To the green wood haste away;
We can show you where he lies,
Fleet of foot, and tall of size;
We can show the marks he made,
When 'gainst the oak his antlers frayed;
HUNTING SONG.

You shall see him brought to bay,
"Waken lords and ladies gay."

Louder, louder chant the lay,
Waken lords and ladies gay!
Tell them youth, and mirth, and glee,
Run a course as well as we:
Time, stern huntsman! who can balk,
Stanch as hound, and fleet as hawk:
Think of this, and rise with day,
Gentle lords and ladies gay.
THE VIOLET.

The violet in her green-wood bower,
    Where birchen boughs with hazles mingle,
May boast itself the fairest flower
    In glen, or copse, or forest dingle.

Though fair her gems of azure hue,
    Beneath the dew-drop's weight reclining;
I've seen an eye of lovelier blue,
    More sweet through wat'ry lustre shining.

The summer sun that dew shall dry,
    Ere yet the day be past its morrow;
Nor longer in my false love's eye
    Remained the tear of parting sorrow.
TO A LADY,

WITH FLOWERS FROM A ROMAN WALL.

TAKE these flowers which, purple waving,
On the ruined rampart grew,
Where, the sons of freedom braving,
Rome's imperial standards flew.

Warriors from the breach of danger
Pluck no longer laurels there:
They but yield the passing stranger
Wild-flower wreaths for Beauty's hair.
THE

BARD'S INCANTATION.

WRITTEN UNDER THE THREAT OF INVASION, IN THE AUTUMN OF 1804.

The Forest of Glenmore is drear,
It is all of black pine, and the dark oak-tree;
And the midnight wind to the mountain deer,
Is whistling the forest lullaby:
The moon looks through the drifting storm,
But the troubled lake reflects not her form,
For the waves roll whitening to the land,
And dash against the shelvy strand.

There is a voice among the trees
That mingles with the groaning oak—
That mingles with the stormy breeze,
And the lake-waves dashing against the rock;—
There is a voice within the wood,
The voice of the Bard in fitful mood;
His song was louder than the blast,
As the Bard of Glenmore through the forest past.
THE BARD'S INCANTATION.

"Wake ye from your sleep of death,
Minstrels and Bards of other days!
For the midnight wind is on the heath,
And the midnight meteors dimly blaze:
The Spectre with his Bloody Hand,*
swandering through the wild woodland;
The owl and the raven are mute for dread,
And the time is meet to awake the dead!

Souls of the mighty, wake and say,
To what high strain your harps were strung,
When Lochlin ploughed her billowy way,
And on your shores her Norsemen flung?
Er Norsemen trained to spoil and blood,
illed to prepare the Raven's food,
, by your harpings doomed to die bloody Largs and Loncarty.†

te are ye all? No murmurs strange on the midnight breeze sail by;
through the pines with whistling change,
mic the harp's wild harmony!
are ye now?—Ye ne'er were mute,
Murder with his bloody foot,
apine with his iron hand,
overing near you mountain strand.

forest of Glenmore is haunted by a spirit called t, or Red-hand.
* the Norwegian invader of Scotland received w
†
"O yet awake the strain to tell,
By every deed in song enrolled,
By every chief who fought or fell,
For Albion's weal in battle bold;—
From Coigach,* first, who rolled his car
Through the deep ranks of Roman war,
To him, of veteran memory dear,
Who victor died on Aboukir.

"By all their swords, by all their scars,
By all their names, a mighty spell!
By all their wounds, by all their wars,
Arise, the mighty strain to tell!
For fiercer than fierce Hengist's strain,
More impious than the heathen Dane,
More grasping than all-grasping Rome,
Gaul's ravening legions hither come!"—

The wind is hushed, and still the lake—
Strange murmurs fill my tingling ears,
Bristles my hair, my sinews quake,
At the dread voice of other years—
"When targets clashed, and bugles rung,
And blades round warriors' heads were flung,
The foremost of the band were we,
And hymn'd the joys of Liberty!"

* The Galgacus of Tacitus.
THE RESOLVE.

IN IMITATION OF AN OLD ENGLISH POEM.—1809.

My wayward fate I needs must plain,
Though bootless be the theme;
I loved, and was beloved again,
Yet all was but a dream:
For, as her love was quickly got,
So it was quickly gone;
No more I'll bask in flame so hot,
But coldly dwell alone.

Not maid more bright than maid was e'er
My fancy shall beguile,
By flattering word, or feigned tear,
By gesture, look, or smile:
No more I'll call the shaft fair shot,
Till it has fairly flown,
Nor scorch me at a flame so hot;—
I'll rather freeze alone.

Each ambushed Cupid I'll defy,
In cheek, or chin, or brow,
And deem the glance of woman's eye
As weak as woman's vow:

25
THE RESOLVE.

I'll lightly hold the lady's heart,
    That is but lightly won;
I'll steel my breast to beauty's art,
    And learn to live alone.

The flaunting torch soon blazes out,
    The diamond's ray abides,
The flame its glory hurls about,
    The gem its lustre hides;
Such gem I fondly deemed was mine,
    And glowed a diamond stone,
But, since each eye may see it shine,
    I'll darkling dwell alone.

No waking dream shall tinge my thought
    With dies so bright and vain,
No silken net, so lightly wrought,
    Shall tangle me again:
No more I'll pay so dear for wit,
    I'll live upon mine own;
Nor shall wild passion trouble it,—
    I'll rather dwell alone.

And thus I'll hush my heart to rest,—
    "Thy loving labour's lost;
Thou shalt no more be wildly blest,
    To be so strangely crost:
The widowed turtles mateless die,
    The phoenix is but one;
They seek no loves—no more will I—
    I'll rather dwell alone."
EPITAPH,

DESIGNED FOR A MONUMENT IN LICHFIELD CATHEDRAL, AT THE BURIAL PLACE OF THE FAMILY OF MISS SEWARD.

Amid these Aisles, where once his precepts showed
The Heavenward pathway which in life he trod,
This simple tablet marks a Father's bier,
And those he loved in life, in death are near;
For him, for them, a daughter bade it rise,
Memorial of domestic charities.

Still would'st thou know why o'er the marble spread,
In female grace the willow droops her head;
Why on her branches, silent and unstrung,
The minstrel harp is emblematic hung:
What Poet's voice is smothered here in dust
Till waked to join the chorus of the just,— Lo! one brief line an answer sad supplies,
Honoured, beloved, and mourned, here SEWARD lies!

Her worth, her warmth of heart, let friendship say,—
Go seek her genius in her living lay.
THE

RETURN TO ULSTER.

Once again, but how changed since my wand'ring began—
I have heard the deep voice of the Lagan and Bann,
And the pines of Clanbrassil resound to the roar,
That wearies the echoes of fair Tullamore.
Alas! my poor bosom, and why shouldst thou burn?
With the scenes of my youth can its raptures return?
Can I live the dear life of delusion again,
That flowed when these echoes first mixed with my strain?

It was then that around me, though poor and unknown,
High spells of mysterious enchantment were thrown;
The streams were of silver, of diamond the dew,
The land was an Eden, for fancy was new.
I had heard of our bards, and my soul was on fire
At the rush of their verse and the sweep of their lyre:
To me 'twas not legend, nor tale to the ear,
But a vision of noontide, distinguished and clear.
THE RETURN TO ULSTER. 293

Ultonia's old heroes awoke at the call,
And renewed the wild pomp of the chase and the hall;
And the standard of Fion flashed fierce from on high,
Like a burst of the sun when the tempest is nigh.*
It seemed that the harp of green Erin once more Could renew all the glories she boasted of yore.—
Yet why at remembrance, fond heart, shouldst thou burn?
They were days of delusion, and cannot return.

But was she, too, a phantom, the Maid who stood by,
And listed my lay while she turned from mine eye?
Was she, too, a vision, just glancing to view,
Then dispersed in the sunbeam or melted to dew?
Oh! would it had been so,—O would that her eye
Had been but a star-glance that shot through the sky,
And her voice, that was moulded to melody's thrill,
Had been but a zephyr that sighed and was still!

Oh! would it had been so.—not then this poor heart
Had learned the sad lesson, to love and to part;
To bear, unassisted, its burthen of care,
While I toiled for the wealth I had no one to share.

* In ancient Irish poetry, the standard of Fion, or Fingal, is called the Sunburst, an epithet feebly rendered by the Sunbeam of Macpherson.
THE RETURN TO ULSTER.

Not then had I said, when life’s summer was d
And the hours of her autumn were fast speedir
"Take the fame and the riches ye brought in train,
"And restore me the dream of my springtide ag
ON THE

MASSACRE OF GLENCOE.

"O tell me, Harper, wherefore flow
Thy wayward notes of wail and wo
Far down the desert of Glencoe,
Where none may list their melody?
Say, harp'st thou to the mists that fly,
Or to the dun deer glancing by,
Or to the eagle that from high Screams chorus to thy minstrelsy."

"No, not to these, for they have rest,—
The mist-wreath has the mountain-crest,
The stag his lair, the erne her nest,
Abode of lone security.
But those for whom I pour the lay,
Not wild wood deep, nor mountain gray,
Not this deep dell that shrouds from day,
Could screen from treacherous cruelty.

"Their flag was furled, and mute their drum,
The very household dogs were dumb,
Unwont to bay at guests that come
In guise of hospitality."
296 THE MASSACRE OF GLENCOE.

His blithest notes the piper plied,
Her gayest snood the maiden tied,
The dame her distaff flung aside,
    To tend her kindly housewifery.

"The hand that mingled in the meal,
At midnight drew the felon steel,
And gave the host's kind breast to feel
    Meed for his hospitality!
The friendly hearth which warmed that hand,
At midnight armed it with the brand
That bade destruction's flames expand
    Their red and fearful blazonry.

"Then woman's shriek was heard in vain,
Nor infancy's unpitied plain,
More than the warrior's groan, could gain
    Respite from ruthless butchery!
The winter wind that whistled shrill,
The snows that night that cloaked the hill,
Though wild and pitiless, bad still Far more than southron clemency.

"Long have my harp's best notes been gone,
Few are its strings, and faint their tone,
They can but sound in desert lone
    Their gray-haired master's misery.
Were each gray hair a minstrel string,
Each chord should imprecation fling,
Till startled Scotland loud should ring
    Revenge for blood and treason!"
PROLOGUE

TO MISS BAILLIE’S PLAY

OF THE

FAMILY LEGEND.

'Tis sweet to hear expiring Summer’s sigh,
Through forests tinged with russet, wail and die;
'Tis sweet and sad the latest notes to hear
Of distant music, dying on the ear;
But far more sadly sweet, on foreign strand,
We list the legends of our native land,
Linked as they come with every tender tie,
Memorials dear of youth and infancy.

Chief, thy wild tales, romantic Caledon,
Wake keen remembrance in each hardy son.
Whether on India’s burning coasts be toil,
Or till Acadia’s* winter-fettered soil,
He hears with throbbing heart and moistened eyes,
And as he hears, what dear illusions rise!

* Acadia, or Nova Scotia.
PROLOGUE.

It opens on his soul his native dell,
The woods wild waving, and the water's swell
Tradition's theme, the tower that threats the plain.
The mossy cairn that hides the hero slain;
The cot beneath whose simple porch were told,
By gray-haired patriarch, the tales of old,
The infant group that hushed their sports the while.
And the dear maid who listened with a smile.
The wanderer, while the vision warms his brain,
Is denizen of Scotland once again.

Are such keen feelings to the crowd confined,
And sleep they in the Poet's gifted mind?
Oh no! for She, within whose mighty page
Each tyrant Passion shows his wo and rage,
Has felt the wizard influence they inspire,
And to your own traditions tuned her lyre.
Yourselves shall judge—whoe'er has raised the sail
By Mull's dark coast, has heard this evening's tale.
The plaided boatman, resting on his oar,
Points to the fatal rock amid the roar
Of whitening waves, and tells whate'er to-night
Our humble stage shall offer to your sight;
Proudly preferred that first our efforts give Scenes glowing from her pen to breathe and live;
More proudly yet, should Caledon approve
The filial token of a Daughter's love!
FAREWELL TO MACKENZIE,
HIGH CHIEF OF KINTAIL.

FROM THE GAELIC.

The original verses are arranged to a beautiful Gaelic air, of which the chorus is adapted to the double pull upon the oars of a galley, and which is therefore distinct from the ordinary jorams, or boat-songs. They were composed by the Family Bard upon the departure of the Earl of Seaforth, who was obliged to take refuge in Spain, after an unsuccessful effort at insurrection in favour of the Stuart family, in the year 1718.

FAREWELL to Mackenneth, great Earl of the North,
The Lord of Lochcarron, Glenshiel, and Seaforth; To the Chieftain this morning his course who began Launching forth on the billows his bark like a swan. For a far foreign land he has hoisted his sail, Farewell to Mackenzie, High Chief of Kintail!

O swift be the galley, and hardy her crew,
300    FAREWELL TO MACKENZIE.

In danger undaunted, unwearied by toil,
Though the whirlwind should rise, and the ocean
should boil:
On the brave vessel's gunnel I drank his bonail,*
And farewell to Mackenzie, High Chief of Kintail!

Awake in thy chamber, thou sweet southland gale!
Like the sighs of his people, breathe soft on his sail;
Be prolonged as regret, that his vassals must know,
Be, fair as their faith, and sincere as their wo:
Be so soft, and so fair, and so faithful, sweet gale,
Wafting onward Mackenzie, High Chief of Kintail!

Be his pilot experienced, and trusty, and wise,
To measure the seas and to study the skies:
May he hoist all his canvass from streamer to deck,
But O! crowd it higher when wafting him back—
Till the cliffs of Skoooroora, and Conan's glad vale, Shall welcome Mackenzie, High Chief of Kintail!

* Bonail', or Bonallerz, the old Scottish phrase for a feast at parting with a friend.
IMITATION
OF THE PRECEDING SONG.

So sung the old Bard, in the grief of his heart,
When he saw his loved Lord from his people depart.
Now mute on thy mountains, O Albyn, are heard
Nor the voice of the song, nor the harp of the bard;
Or its strings are but waked by the stern winter gale,
As they mourn for Mackenzie, last Chief of Kintail.

From the far Southland border a Minstrel came forth,
And he waited the hour that some Bard of the north,
His hand on the harp of the ancient should cast,
And bid its wild numbers mix high with the blast;
But no Bard was there left in the land of the Gael,
To lament for Mackenzie, last Chief of Kintail.

And shalt thou then sleep, did the Minstrel exclaim,
Like the son of the lowly, unnoticed by fame?
No, Son of Fitzgerald! in accents of wo,
The song thou hast loved o'er thy coffin shall flow,
And teach thy wild mountains to join in the wail,
That laments for Mackenzie, last Chief of Kintail.
IMITATION.

In vain, the bright course of thy talents to wren
Fate deadened thine ear and imprisoned thy tor
For brighter o'er all her obstructions arose
The glow of the genius they could not oppose;
And who in the land of the Saxon or Gael,
Might match with Mackenzie, High Chief of Kintail?

Thy sons rose around thee in light and in love,
All a father could hope, all a friend could appro
What 'vails it the tale of thy sorrows to tell,—
In the spring time of youth and of promise they
Of the line of Fitzgerald remains not a male,
To bear the proud name of the Chief of Kintail.

And thou, gentle Dame, who must bear to thy
For thy clan and thy country the cares of a Ch
Whom brief rolling moons in six changes have l
Of thy husband, and father, and brethren bereft;
To thine ear of affection, how sad is the hail,
That salutes thee the Heir of the line of Kintail!
WAR-SONG OF LACHLAN, HIGH CHIEF OF MACLEAN,
FROM THE GAELIC.

This song appears to be imperfect, or at least, like many of the early Gaelic poems, makes a rapid transition from one subject to another; from the situation, namely, of one of the daughters of the clan, who opens the song by lamenting the absence of her lover, to a eulogy over the military glories of the Chieftain. The translator has endeavoured to imitate the abrupt style of the original.

A Weary month has wandered o'er
Since last we parted on the shore;
Heaven! that I saw thee, Love, once more,
Safe on that shore again!—
'Twas valiant Lachlan gave the word:
Lachlan, of many a galley lord:
He called his kindred bands on board,
And launched them on the main.
WAR-SONG OF LACHLAN.

Clan-Gillian* is to ocean gone;
Clan-Gillian, fierce in foray known;
Rejoicing in the glory won,
    In many a bloody broil:
For wide is heard the thundering fray,
The rout, the ruin, the dismay,
When from the twilight glens away
    Clan-Gillian drives the spoil.

Wo to the hills that shall rebound
Our banded bagpipes' maddening sound;
Clan-Gillian's onset echoing round,
    Shall shake their inmost cell.
Wo to the bark whose crew shall gaze,
Where Lachlan's silken streamer plays;
The fools might face the lightning's blaze
    As wisely and as well!

* i.e. The clan of Maclean, literally the race of Gillian.
SAINT CLOUD.

Soft spread the southern Summer
   Her veil of darksome blue;
Ten thousand stars combined to ligh
   The terrace of Saint Cloud.

The evening breezes gently sighed,
   Like breath of lover true,
Bewailing the deserted pride
   And wreck of sweet Saint Cloud.

The drum's deep roll was heard afar,
   The bugle wildly blew
Good night to Hulan and Hussar,
   That garrison Saint Cloud.

The startled Naiads from the shade
   With broken urns withdrew,
And silenced was that proud cascade,
   The glory of Saint Cloud.

Ve sate upon its steps of stone,
   Nor could its silence rue,
Ten waked to music of our own,
   The echoes of Saint Cloud.
SAINT CLOUD.

Slow Seine might hear each lovely note
        Fall light as summer-dew,
While through the moonless air they float
        Prolonged from fair Saint Cloud.

And sure a melody more sweet
        His waters never knew,
Though music's self was wont to meet
        With Princes at Saint Cloud.

Nor then, with more delighted ear,
        The circle round he drew,
Than ours, when gathered round to hear
        Our songstress at Saint Cloud.

Few happy hours poor mortals pass,—
        Then give those hours their due,
And rank among the foremost class
        Our evenings at Saint Cloud.

PARIS, Sept. 5, 1815.

THE END.